Dear Don,

I am enclosing a draft of our paper for Curator. Please feel free to make any changes, additions, etc. that you think are needed.

Keep in mind that the paper is written for people who are not anthropologists. It has to awaken their interest in the subject and inform them, but it cannot be too detailed or it will put them to sleep. Along with it there will be some photographs of the exhibit and of you at work. These have not come up from photography yet, but I will send you a set as soon as I can.

I am going to insist that you be senior author (provided, of course, that you think it is a good paper). Frankly, writing it was easy, since there really was something worthwhile to write about. Don, it is not only your work that we are writing about but your idea of what it all means. Objectively speaking, my contribution is relatively small, but I am simply glad to assist where I can. I hope you will accept this argument and remain the senior author.

Betsy and I think of you and Evelyn often and hope that the treatments she is getting will be successful. Please give her our best wishes.

Sincerely,

Dick
