Dear Sir:

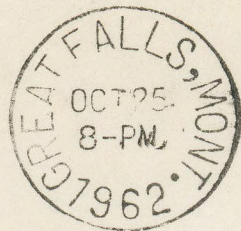

I have been quite interested and taken up with the hobby of making arrowheads for several years now and have acquired some skill, a few scars, considerable travel time between home and the rock piles and a growing collection of points for my display. Some people call them "fakes", others say they're "beautiful" and ^{others} have no comment but look at me as though I must be a "throwback" from another age.

A friend in Billings asked me to write to Dr H. M. Womington of the Denver Museum telling her of my efforts and accomplishments and in her reply she gave me your address and suggested I get in touch with you. She spoke highly of you and your skill in flaking, stating too, that we might find it of value to compare notes and combine our efforts. What do you say? If ~~interested~~, I would be very glad to hear from you.

Sincerely,
James A. Healy
