Dear Don:

I am spending a few days cleaning and organizing the office and home study, trying to get caught up on all the small details so I can concentrate for the coming month on a couple of major editing jobs. I managed to get another short paper to the editor, tentative entitled "Fish, roots, game and trade in the Pacific Northwest," [overview of Plateau ethnography] for the September issue of the Journal of Forestry. I also have a summary paper on Plateau archaeology that should appear in the August issue of that journal. Keeps me busy, anyway. I also have been shipped one point and one scraper from the Plainview site matrix blocks that were excavated in 1947 and just now taken apart. I have to have descriptions and drawings of them ready in the next couple of weeks, for an appendix to a report that is due to the contracting agency in late August. Should all keep me busy, right? In the meantime I'm going fishing on the South Platte this weekend, on my way to Dolores for a senior staff meeting.

In the process of cleaning I came across this photo that I meant to send you months ago. It is a print from a slide that Edgar Bryan took at your commencement, and I thought you might like to have it.

I think Chris sent along to you a copy of the report we just finished on a survey from southwestern Idaho; hope you like it. It has a lot of site locational information in it so we can't make it available to the general public, but we did get enough to distribute copies to the professional community.

Got to run and get this done so I can leave tomorrow. Hope you're having a good summer, and both Frank Leonhardy and Dick Daugherty are doing great after their mutual by-pass surgeries.

Love,

Pethann
