Museum

Wednesday morning

Dear Don and Evelyn,

Here finally is the version of the paper I came up with after editing and doing a few drawings. It's only the last part about the O.A. burins but since this was the section we thought was unclearest I've sent it along before the rest. I don't know what the layout will be when this gets published so I've put the captions for the pictures on separate pages. Of course this isn't the final copy--Mae is typing that later. I just wanted to see what you both think of it so far, and ask for suggestions or improvements. I showed it to my roommate who knows nothing about flintknapping and she was able to understand pretty well what was being talked about. So...

The panels from the AMNH are almost finished--only 3 more to repair. It shouldn't be too long now until Glen D. gets the rest of the museum ready to open. There's a Paiute tule hut built by Margaret Wheat and an old Paiute lady named Mrs. George. The whole rest of the room is to be displays on primitive through modern housing. From what Glen has said I don't think he's too anxious to have any opening ceremonies, but this is Dr. Swanson's plan so I guess it's still on. I'm just hoping that it won't fall between the 17th and 21st of November. My very oldest friend is getting married then in North Carolina and has asked me to be her only attendant, so I will be flying back for those few days.

Thank you for that Holmes book. I started reading it last night. It should be a great help in putting together the thesis.

I'll get the rest of your O.A. paper to you very soon. In the meantime, please let me know what you think of the last part and drawings.

Chris
P.S. The glossary is all ready for typing now - it's just a matter of reducing the illustrations to size.
