-- DIRECTORY --

Idaho's Forest Products Industry, 1974

by

E. Bruce Godfrey, Ervin G. Schuster and William D. Koss^{1/}

This directory was developed as a part of a larger study^{2/} concerning the forest products industry of Idaho. The general purpose of the study is to determine the status and importance of this industry in Idaho.

One of the first efforts undertaken in the study involved the identification of firms^{3/} who were operating during 1973. This directory is one result of this activity. The questionnaires used by Williams (4, 5) in studying the sawmill industry in the early 1960's provided the initial list of potential firms to be contacted. Firms listed in published directories (1) and directories from other agencies (2) were added to this basic list of firms. This list of firms was mailed to the applicable extension agricultural agents who work in Idaho's forty-four counties. These agents added firms which they knew existed but were not included in this list and deleted firms that they knew to be out of business. The remaining firms provided the basic list of firms that were interviewed during 1974. Other firms were added or deleted to the list of firms contacted whenever anyone knew of firms that had gone out of business or which had not previously been identified. As a result of the interviews conducted, we believe that this directory is the most complete and accurate list of firms available. It is recognized, however, that some firms

^{2/} This research was jointly sponsored by the Intermountain Forest and Range Experiment Station, Forest Service; the College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Experiment Station, University of Idaho; and Idaho's Forest Industry.

^{3/} This directory includes only those firms which use "roundwood" or trees in some form to make or manufacture other products. Firms such as wholesalers, loggers and forest consultants are therefore not included in this directory.

are known to be no longer in business (these are indicated with an * in the county lists) and that other firms began operation during 1974 and are not included because the study emphasized production during 1973.

This directory is designed to achieve the following purposes. First, land administrators, politicians and other decision makers should find the directory of use in determining who might be affected by alternative proposed policies. Second, buyers of forest products should find the directory of use in determining who might be producing products desired. Third, industry people may find the directory useful in helping form possible trade associations, cooperatives or in identifying firms who might have similar problems.

The directory is divided into four major sections. The first, printed on red paper, is a complete alphabetical listing of firms. The second section (beige pages) is an alphabetical listing of all firms by county. This list also contains a complete mailing address for each firm. The products produced and the species used by these firms is also found in this listing. This section is the primary section that needs to be used by persons trying to contact a particular firm. The third section (blue pages) lists the firms, by number, that produce each of the products indicated. This section must be used with the previous sections to identify a particular firm. The final section (brown pages) lists those firms that use the species indicated to manufacture various products.
