Foreword

THE thirteenth volume of The Gem of the Mountains is an unpretentious record of student activities in the University during the past year. It has been necessary to keep within the narrow limits imposed by financial considerations and by inexperience. And yet we hope the book will serve to perpetuate in some measure an ever-deepening reverence for our Alma Mater and a store of remembrance that shall grow the richer with the receding years.

The University of Idaho

THE University of Idaho was authorized by an Act of the Territorial Legislature in 1889. It began its actual instructional work in October, 1892. Splendid service and loyalty have been devoted to the upbuilding of the Institution. This is expressed by her material equipment consisting of nine major and four minor buildings, a stock-judging pavilion, farm buildings, together with 340 acres of land in campus and college farm, a library, laboratories and general college equipment, having a total value of $800,000. In addition to this equipment located at Moscow, there are experimental and demonstration farms located at Clagstone, Sandpoint, Caldwell, Gooding and Aberdeen. These comprise a total of 800 acres, and they have an equipment valued at $50,000.

The original land endowment of the University consisted of 286,080 acres of federal lands, distributed as follows:

- 96,000 acres for the University proper;
- 100,000 acres for the School of Science;
- 90,000 acres for the College of Agriculture.

Approximately one-fourth of this land has been sold for a little more than a million dollars. It is probable that the remaining lands should be sold for more than five million, tho their actual value has not been made known. The Federal government has stipulated that only the income of this land may be used toward paying current expenses at the State University. These federal lands give an annual income thru rentals and interests of $65,000 to $70,000 per year.

Other federal grants for work at the State University are: $50,000 from the Morrill Fund, $15,000 per year from the Adams, $15,000 from the Hatch, and $10,000 per year from the Smith-Lever. By federal law, the Smith-Lever funds must be used in extension work carried on by county agents and specialists in home economics. Both the Adams and Hatch Funds must be used in conducting original research upon projects approved by the United States Department of Agriculture.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the Federal government makes an annual contribution aggregating $155,000 to $160,000 for the conduct of the work carried on at the University of Idaho.

The State support was represented last biennium by an annual appropriation of $70,050 for the University proper and $27,400 per year for co-operative work. Inasmuch as there are four colleges at the State University, namely, the College of Letters and Sciences, the College of Agriculture, the College of Engineering, the College of Law, the State of Idaho provided only $17,512.50 per year per college for the support of higher education at her State University during the past biennium.

Stating this in another form, it may be said that during the past biennium there was given for educational work at the State University 67 cents out of every $100 collected as taxes, and 26 cents toward the work in the Agricultural College. Comparing the educational appropriations of other states in the Pacific Northwest, we have:

*California	$1,151,020
Washington	651,934
Oregon	417,000
Utah	322,772
Montana	252,940
Idaho	103,000
Nevada	101,760
Wyoming	92,840

* These figures are based on Report, U. S. Commissioner of Education.

Approaching this from the standpoint of appropriation per thousand of population, these states have the following rank:

*Nevada	$1,112
Utah	817
Montana	623
Wyoming	588
Oregon	571
Washington	509
California	447
Idaho	284

* These figures are based on Report, U. S. Commissioner of Education.

The primary service of the State University is to relate itself to every educational unit in the commonwealth in a great effort to cause the young people of the state to know and to re-act educationally. With this ideal before her, the State University endeavors to secure adequately trained teachers who are devoted to high standards of scholarship and to the development of high characters and right ideals of citizenship. The carrying forward of these ideals demands that the instructors possess the broadest vision and the highest devotion to public service; they must have poise without the loss of enthusiasm, and they must regard performance in their respective positions as more important than the receipt of salary. In order that this type of teacher may properly perform his tasks, it is necessary that the state make reasonable provision for library and laboratory supplies. Moreover, it is essential that provisions be made for extension of University teaching,—a field which has scarcely been entered by the University, which she cannot enter until provision is made by state appropriation.

This primary function of teaching will never be performed in its most efficient and highest manner unless encouragement is given to the more fundamental educational work of extending the boundaries of knowledge. True, it will be impossible for the state of Idaho to make extensive appropriations for carrying on research work at her State University at present. But she can and she should have a sympathetic appreciation of this pressing need of seeking out new truth and seeking out new methods of applying this to the industrial and economic life of the state.

If the students and the alumni of the University would serve their Alma Mater in a constructive and helpful way, they would lay hold of these three distinctive features of the University service: First, teaching; second, learning the truth about new principles in the sciences and industries concerned with the welfare of the state; third, discovering efficient and economic methods of applying these newly discovered principles. When the sons and daughters of the University of Idaho have clearly grasped these truths and discovered their educational, industrial and economic value, then it is a duty which devolves upon them to make these facts clearly known to the citizens of the commonwealth.

Idaho has a citizenship which is small and wonderfully differentiated on account of industrial, racial, religious and political factors. Nevertheless, it is a citizenship which believes in the right type of progress and it stands for the best in education, in economics and in law. The opportunity is ours. It is one of the greatest opportunities for service presented to the students of any state university in the United States. The University entrusts this to your keeping with the conviction that you will use your best endeavors to make the following truths known:

First, that the state of Idaho thus far has granted very modest appropriations for carrying on the great work with which our State University is commissioned;

Second, that notwithstanding this financial limitation, the University has performed her three-fold work with quite an unusual degree of success. The evidence that she has given an excellent account of her commission to teach will be found in the records of her students whether they have been for a short or a long time under her tutelage. Her discharge of the duties to discover new principles is evidenced by her contribution to the industry of mining where the pressing and increasingly valuable process of flotation has been the subject of successful investigation. In agriculture, definite contributions have been made in discovering the principles which control the milling qualities of grains, the factors concerned with improving breeds of livestock. In the field of forestry there have been notable contributions in discovering the principles which make for conservation of by-products and the processing of all kinds of woods.

Convincing testimony that the University is discharging her third great obligation,—that of showing how these principles may be applied effectively and economically,—is afforded by each of the industries in which the principles worked out in research laboratories at the University have been applied with success and increasing gains.

However, if the citizens of the State are indifferent to the modern and commanding ideals of education, there can be no hope of developing higher education nor secondary education in Idaho. That development depends wholly upon wise leadership which is willing to abide with the problems and work of education for long periods of time in order to give force and form to educational advancement. The people know these truths and it is merely a question whether they will act on the evidence of history and present economic conditions. It is confidently believed that they will act promptly and sympathetically if they are given the facts.

Traditions

COLLEGE life consists very largely of traditions. This being true, it may well be worth our while to see what they are, what disadvantages they may entail, and what sort of traditions are worthy of perpetuation.

Traditions are human. We do not speak of the traditions of the stars, nor of the mountains, nor of the flowers, nor of the beasts, permanent and unchanging as all these, in the ordinary sense, may be and are. They can acquire traditions only in their relations to man, for traditions are the opinions, practices, and customs handed down from one generation to another.

Traditions are oral. They are communicated almost solely by word of mouth. We do not in general sit down and write them out for posterity. Rather, because of their intrinsic interest or value we tell them to our associates and they in turn pass them on to others.

Traditions are an evolution. We do not say, "Go to now, let us make some traditions." Instead, they come into being of themselves, and then, with the years, develop into some measure of usefulness or else are cast aside. A merely local or temporary occurrence or state of feeling may possibly grow into a tradition, but only when it is based upon some human trait which is universal and permanent.

Taken collectively, traditions really constitute what we call conservatism. Thus, since the universities are said to be the very bulwarks of conservatism, we are naturally led to a consideration of our own traditions. Are we wisely keeping only that which is best in the old, with minds alert for the possibly better new? For custom may become a tyrant. Lord Bacon says, "A forward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as an innovation; and they that reverence too much old times are but a scorn to the new." And the poet Cowper:

"The slaves of custom and established mode,
With pack-horse constancy we keep the road,
Crooked or straight, thru quags or thorny dells,
True to the jingling of our leaders' bells."

Are we, in a young university like Idaho, in such danger? We are, so long as we tolerate any "opinion, custom, or practice" which in itself is indefensible, merely because of a mistaken loyalty to tradition. One hesitates to single out for unfavorable mention any such bad tradition, lest he be accused of disloyalty or crabbedness. It may be safer, then, to mention a former Idaho tradition such as hazing, now happily extinct, or at least in its death-throes. At Idaho, fortunately, as in all the older, larger universities, it is no longer considered a crime to be one of the University's newest guests or members. No longer is personal liberty interfered with. (The donning of the green cap I can regard only as a picturesque, sensible tradition promoting class unity and by no means in the category of hazing customs.)

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

But what shall we say of tolerated "sneaks," be they of the classroom, examination, managerial, picnic, "bust," or dance variety? Are they not excrescences upon the fair vine of our growth, too unlovely for retention and fit only for the inexorable shears of public condemnation? Let us comfort ourselves with Darwin's words: "After the lapse of time, under changing conditions of life, if any part comes to be injurious, it will be modified; or if it be not so, the being will become extinct as myriads have become extinct."

But enough of the darker side of college traditions, for as a rule I believe them to be wholesome, enlivening, and highly valuable as contributing to that genuine sentiment—not sentimentality—which should envelop our academic life. Too long have we regarded sheer intellect as the highest part of our natures. Highest it may be,—farthest from the earth,—but not the deepest, not even the most important part of our lives. Our feelings come earlier, last longer, and occupy far more of our conscious existence than do our thoughts.

College traditions are like the ivy that covers the walls of brick, the green grass that rests the eye upon an August day, the pines that soften the colors and lines of the jagged hills. Too much intellectuality here at Idaho? Of course not—doubtless too little. But with the dignity, the atmosphere, the beauty of age and the real traditions of age we are all too scantily furnished. These are the things that bring the smile to the eyes of the reminiscent alumnus; that draw him back to his Alma Mater in memory and, whenever possible, in person; that mold alike student and teacher as they are in turn are shaping, be it ever so little, the figure and destiny of their university home. These are assets not to be laid before the coldly appraising eye of taxpayer or legislator, but none the less actual because intangible.

Class Patroness

Class of Nineteen Hundred and Sixteen

THE Class of 1916 has every reason to be proud of its achievements since those memorable days in September, 1912, when our class of 175 Freshmen struggled thru the details of registration. The newcomers quickly leaped into the lime-light with a splendid contribution to the Varsity football squad and after the Underclassman football game, the defeated Sophomores could best testify to the prowess of the "Sweet Sixteeners." The 17th of March witnessed another victory over the Sophs followed by the customary bury-the-hatchet party. Not only in athletics but also in scholarship, debate, dramatics, and society, the class has been prominent.

However, our fame does not depend on these transient things which come and go each year as a matter of course and are soon forgotten. The Junior Class initiated "Tag Day," which promises to ripen into a tradition. The abolition of the old one-sided St. Patrick's Day Rush was due to the Class of '16, and the success of the new Underclassman Day as tried last year for the first time cannot be questioned.

Such innovations as these are surely of value and the future will determine their permanency and worth.

The officers of the class for the Junior year are as follows:

First Semester	President	Second Semester
HEDLEY DINGLE	C. F. JOHNSON
HOWARD HOLADAY	E. R. HAWKINS
DOROTHY WENZ	HELEN DENEKE
ALBERT RAPP	DEIGH BOYD
Representative to Student Affairs Committee	A. L. MCMONIGLE

Idaho College of Law

THE College of Law, or, as it also is called, The Idaho Law School, now gives a three years' course in law and aims to fit its students after graduation for immediate practice at the Bar anywhere in the Northwest.

The method of instruction is the well known "Case System" invented and introduced first into the Harvard Law School in the early seventies by Dean Langdell—a system which has won its way on its own merits, until it is recognized throughout the world as the best system for teaching the Common Law of England, of the English Colonies and of our United States. It combines the study of law from original sources in the cases themselves in which the law is decided, with recitation in the classroom upon these cases, and with thorough analysis and criticism, including a full and frank discussion upon them. In effect it is the application of laboratory methods to law combined with the study and discussion of principles.

In the Law School there is a Law Club, in full operation, and a Practice Court. In the Law Club, which is divided into first, second and third year courts, students of each court investigate questions of law, as counsel for plaintiff and defendant respectively, prepare briefs maintaining the side upon which they have been assigned, and argue the same before the rest of their class, sitting as a regular court. In the case of the First Year Court, one of the Second Year Court, especially assigned, sits as Chief Justice and assists the rest of the Court, which is composed of first year students, in arriving at their decision.

In the Practice Court the third year students, under the able supervision of Mr. Frank L. Moore, draw court papers, try questions of fact before juries composed of lower classmen, and argue questions of law before one of their own members, acting as Judge, just as in regular practice.

In all of these things, in Practice Court, Law Club and classroom, the endeavor is to inculcate the spirit of unity, co-operation and mutual helpfulness, it being the belief of the Law Faculty that such a spirit of heart and mind tends to develop the broadest, deepest and quickest insight into the law as well as into everything else.

The School of Practical Agriculture

THE School of Practical Agriculture was organized in 1910 for the purpose of providing practical agricultural training for those young men who are unable to take a high school course. The work given in this school appeals especially to the boys of the state who wish to put their acquired information into actual application on the farm.

Almost without exception, those who have been graduated have returned to the communities from which they came and are tilling the soil. The University expects a great deal of support from these men in the future. They are to be among the most stable citizens of the state and will, no doubt, be industrial, social and political leaders in their localities.

The work for graduation requires a period of five months for three years. In addition to a large number of agricultural subjects, a liberal period each week is devoted to basic and cultural subjects such as the student would receive in a high school course.

Each year has seen an increase in the enrollment in the School of Agriculture. This year there were eighty-two, and another year will bring more than a hundred.

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

A. S. U. I.

 HE Associated Students of the University of Idaho is an organization of which all regular students are members. It has been in existence since the college year 1903-04. Membership allows a student the privilege of voting at student body meetings and elections and an admission ticket to all college athletic contests undertaken at home, debated, Argonaut, etc.

The Executive Board of the A. S. U. I. carries on the business of the organization, apportions the money received from Registration into the various funds, audits the accounts of all officers, approves all disbursements, requires all officers to comply with the provisions of the Constitution, assumes charge of all elections and, in general, considers the welfare of the students and brings important questions before them when it is advisable. The Board is composed of four officers and a member each from the Athletic Council, the Debate Council, the Argonaut Staff, and the Faculty. The members are elected at the Student Body election.

 HE Young Men's Christian Association aims to promote the things that are most worth while in the life of the University; high scholastic standards, clean athletics, and Christian ideals of citizenship. This work has been greatly hindered in the past by the lack of leadership, but the Association was fortunate this year in securing the services of Mr. T. W. Leonard, a big-hearted man whose quiet influence has built up a very favorable attitude toward the work he represents. Although "Tom" has modestly kept in the background, it is only necessary to glance at results to see that the new Secretary has succeeded in laying a broad and deep foundation for the future work of the Association here.

The Annual Stag Mix, a regular occurrence at the opening of the school year, gave the necessary opportunity to get acquainted and learn the college yells. But it was due to some of the subsequent stirring events which convinced both friends and enemies that our Christian organizations had ceased to exist and had begun to live.

Y. W. C. A.

The purpose of the Young Women's Christian Association is to unite the women of the institution in loyalty to Christ, thru Bible study and Christian service. To this end Bible study and mission study classes have been conducted in four Sunday Schools of Moscow, with a total enrollment of sixty college students. Our devotional meetings have been held twice a month during the school year. The attendance has been good and the varied programs have been interesting. The High School Association, a branch of the University organization, has been under our supervision. The two associations sent four delegates to the Summer Conference at Cohasset Beach last June. The chief financial undertaking of the year has been the furnishing of a rest room for the college women. March 12-14, we entertained the Cabinet Conference of the Inland Empire. Delegates from Whitworth College, Cheney Normal School, Whitman College, and Washington State College were in attendance. The principal social events of the college year were the Student Reception and the County Fair, both of which we gave in conjunction with the Young Men's Christian Association, and the tea for faculty and college women given at the home of President Brannon in the fall. In all our work we have had the support and co-operation of the faculty women. Especially are we indebted to the members of our advisory board, Mrs. Shattuck, Mrs. Axtell, Mrs. Eldridge Sr., Mrs. Asbury, Miss Benton, Miss Brashear, and Miss Smith.

The Associated Foresters

IHERE is an organization of the Students of Forestry for the purpose of keeping in touch with the practical side of Forestry. Meetings are held every week in which every student must take his part in the discussion of current lumbering and Forestry literature. Every two weeks during the winter months addresses are given by some man prominent in the Forestry and Lumbering circles of the Northwest.

The locations of the University, within the heart of the great Inland Empire timber region and only a short distance from some of the largest lumbering operations in the world, affords the members of this club a splendid opportunity for practical study and observation.

The Pre-Medic Club

THE Pre-Medic Club is now in its second year of existence. Many of last year's members are back in the organization, while others are now in medical schools in different parts of the country. Several of the freshmen have taken membership and enjoy the privileges of the others in the club. A closer relationship of those having the common interest of studying medicine has proved itself very beneficial and at the occasional meetings of the club the topics of discussion lend much toward furthering the interests of the members in their work.

The Zoology and Chemistry departments are offering more and better courses than ever before. The Chemistry at Idaho is acceptable and up to standard as any medical school in the country, and the more advanced Zoology, Histology, Embryology, Cytology, etc., are given with perhaps more emphasis and exactness than like courses in the medical schools.

The club tries to promote a booster's interest for the University, whereby it endeavors to get students from all over the state, who contemplate taking medicine, to patronize their home University for at least two years of their preparatory medical work in the basic and essentially fundamental courses that are so capably presented at Idaho.

Home Economics Association

THE Idaho Home Economics Association was organized December 3, 1912, in honor of Ellen Richards—the founder of Home Economics in the United States. Regular meetings are held on the third Wednesday of each month.

The activities of the Club are expressed by:

I. Contributions to the Ellen Richards Memorial Fund in the way of food charts, to be used as kitchen leaflets. The object of this fund is:

1. Encouragement of better prepared advanced scientific workers in Home Economics;
2. Publication of results of scientific study;
3. Popularization of Home Economics.

II. Monthly programs, which have included treatises on the State Federation, Vocational Education for Women, the Value of Architecture in the Home, Russell Sage Foundation, the Playground Movement, Land Grant Colleges, with occasional social gatherings and music.

III. Tea served in the Home Economics dining-rooms, which are open to all University people for a social hour; an evening social function, including stunts and dancing, at which all the women of the University are present.

EVER before in the history of the University has the Glee Club taken so active a part as this year. The club has given concerts in Lewiston, Spokane, Sandpoint, Coeur d'Alene, Wallace, Kellogg, St. Maries, and two concerts in Moscow. The trips that the club has taken this year are meant only to be a starter. Next year a trip to Southern Idaho is planned as well as a return tour of the northern part of the State.

Idaho can justly be proud of its "Best Glee Club in the West."

The University Male Quartette

MUCH of the success of the Glee Club this year was due to the fine work of the University Male Quartette. Wherever it appeared, the quartette made a decided hit, and on the northern trip, its reception was most enthusiastic. Its popularity may be judged by the large number of encores to which it was everywhere forced to respond. The members of the quartette are: Jean Gerlough, first tenor; Laurence Stone, second tenor; Rollin Buffington, baritone, and E. K. Humphries, bass. John Brigham was the substitute member, and E. K. Humphries director of the quartette. Three of its members will be lost by graduation this year.

The String Quartette

THE University String Quartet, now in its second year, is certainly a unique feature among the many and varied student interests and activities, for Chamber Music Organizations are extant, are possible in comparatively few universities.

This year the personnel is the same as that of last year with the exception of the leader. Aside from numerous appearances on assembly programs, at special functions and various occasions in connection with University Calendar, the quartet has co-operated with the Glee Club in all its concerts and was recognized as a novel and attractive feature on the Northern Idaho tour.

Since its organization, the quartet has given five Chamber Music recitals in the form of Vesper Concerts, rehearsals for which are held bi-weekly, under the supervision of the Violin department.

A steady improvement in the ensemble has been the result of a wider experience in this field of art plus a greater personal sympathy within the organization itself.

The standard of performance and selection of composition has been maintained as much as possible with results which only follow careful study of the classics, the foundation of success in any sincere musical endeavor.

The Alumni Association

HE University of Idaho opened its doors on the third day of October, 1892. It graduated its first class in 1896—two men and two women. Since that time the institution has given a complete course to four hundred and ninety-six students. The alumni are located successfully in all vocations: Statesmen, legislators, educators, lawyers, physicians, ministers, and laymen are found in this body. The officers of the Alumni Association are:

President	W. H. MASON
First Vice President	FLOYD QUINBY

The University Orchestra

Though small in numbers, the University Orchestra has accomplished much this year, due to the untiring perseverance of Mr. Parmalee, who is directing the organization. The orchestra has made several very creditable appearances and has never failed to please. The members meet each Wednesday for a three-hour practice and at any other time when it is deemed necessary.

The De Smet Club

THE DeSmet Club, composed of the Catholic people of the University, was organized four years ago for the purpose of the religious development of its members. It takes its name from the first Catholic Missionary to Idaho. Regular meetings are held, at which papers on topics of current interest are read.

Within the last year the club has become affiliated with the Catholic Students' Association of America, which has chapters in many of the large colleges and universities of the United States.

Ayers Law Club

THE Ayers Law Club was organized by the graduating class of the Law School of 1914. It is based for the main part upon the plan of the Harvard Law School Law Clubs. Following the custom of those Law Clubs to name each after some member of the Harvard Law School Faculty, the Law Club in Idaho was named by its founders for the Dean of the Faculty of the Idaho Law School, The Ayers Law Club.

Its main object is seen in the Preamble to its Constitution. "We, the members of the Third-Year Class of the College of Law of the University of Idaho, also known as the Idaho Law School, in order to further by practical work the studies pursued in the Law School, do hereby establish this Law Club for the benefit of our fellow students and ourselves."

Its more direct purpose is seen in Article II of its Constitution. "The more direct purpose of this Law Club shall be to argue questions of law and by special arrangement to hold trials of fact."

The club consists of a First, Second, and Third Year Court. In these courts points of law are briefed and argued, just as in courts of law. Also the First and Second Year Courts hold conferences upon legal questions.

The officers of the club are:

Chief Justice	JOHN L. PHILLIPS
Clerk, Second Year Court	VERNON CREASON
Clerk, First Year Court	ROBERT W. BECKWITH

At present every member of the Law School is a member of this Law Club.

The Year in Debate

QF COURSE the feature of Idaho's debate season, 1914-15, was the southern trip made by Alvin Beckman and Melvin Ison. The victories over the Utah Aggies and the University of Southern California are recognized to be among the most memorable of that long string of wins which have gone to the credit of the Silver and Gold. At Utah the decision was unanimous and in Los Angeles the vote stood two to one. In both places Idaho's representatives went against finished debaters and in both places they made a remarkable showing and left a good impression.

In the Triangular debate held with O. A. C. and W. S. C., Idaho won unanimously at home and lost unanimously at Pullman, being represented by Alvin Beckman, Julius Nordby, Charles Chandler and Lawrence Huff. Idaho halved her annual debate with Gonzaga, the home teams winning and the visiting teams losing. March 5 was the date of this debate and Idaho's speakers were Ison, Beckman, Dingle, Owens, Boeckel, and Priest.

The Debate Council

The Debate Council has the supervision of all intercollegiate debates and oratorical contests. It is composed of six student members elected by the student body, and the debate coach, who acts only as an advisory member.

Debate Coaches

PROF. LEWIS deserves much praise for his work as assistant debate coach. At a time when thorough training was necessary to whip our team into shape, Prof. Lewis was the man of the hour and coached successfully the first debaters of the season.

Prof. Hulme continued the good work already begun. With his characteristic ability he accomplished wonders with a small number of candidates and a scanty amount of printed material bearing on the subjects for debate. One cogent reason why the Idaho debaters were able to win from such colleges as the University of Southern California may be tersely stated:—Prof. Hulme.

Military Department

HE Military Department during the present school year has been assisted materially by having the services of upperclassmen as Cadet Officers.

At the annual inspection of the Cadet Corps, Company B won the first place in the competitive company drill by a small percentage (Captain Gregory in command). Company C, under the command of Captain Morrison, won second place.

A rifle club was formed this year. This club is a member of the National Rifle Association of America, headquarters at Washington, D. C. The team has not been very successful so far, but with new rifles next year it is hoped that the team may do good work.

The annual encampment of the Cadet Corps for the past two years has been at Hayden Lake, Idaho. On the whole the encampment there is very pleasant. While the greater portion of the time is taken up with military duties, there is ample time for recreation. The lake and the vicinity afford many opportunities for pleasure trips, fishing, etc.

FRATERNITIES

Fraternities

 HE expansion of the fraternity field at Idaho has been consistent, keeping pace with a growing student body. The fact that strong nationals are coming in is most encouraging to the Greek letter world. There is much that is good in fraternities and so long as the same democratic spirit obtains among these societies they will continue to enjoy the respect and confidence of "the powers that be."

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

Pan-Hellenic Council

IHIS is an inter-fraternity organization which was formed in 1911. The council is composed of two representatives from each fraternity and sorority. Its usefulness lies in united action of the fraternities on matters of common interest and in adjusting the relations between the faculty and the Greeks.

The University Athletic Board is composed of seven members of the A. S. U. I., elected each year at the general election, and the graduate-manager of athletics.  JOHN G. GRIFFITH
 "Pink"

It is "Pink's" strenuous task each year to turn out, from a limited supply of good material, football, basket ball and baseball teams which will be in the running with the teams of the other, and larger, institutions of the Northwest. His teams have not always won, but they have always been remembered by the other colleges for the hard clean fight they put up. "Pink" has the name of being the "foxiest" coach in the Conference.

Graduate Manager
 CLARENCE E. FAVRE

When Gus Larson left Idaho last fall, it became necessary to find a competent successor to him as graduate-manager of Idaho's athletics. The choice fell upon Clarence Favre, '14, who was a member of the football team for four years and captain of the team in his Senior year. "Fav" has been very successful in continuing the good work started by "Gus."

Coach
 CLARENCE S. EDMUNDSON
 "Hec"

"Hec" is Idaho's track coach. He is one of the best middle distance runners in the country and was a member of the American team which went to the Olympic games in 1912. He holds the Idaho records for the quarter, the half-mile and the mile. Last year, "Hec" turned out the best team Idaho has seen in years, and it is expected that he will have an even better team in 1915.

FOOT BALL

ISNT HE SWEET?

C.H.

Football

THE 1914 football season was not a particularly successful one from the standpoint of games won. Yet it cannot be said that Idaho had a weak team. Nine members of our 1913 team, which won the championship of the Inland Empire, were back in the game and it was necessary only to have a few new men to have the old machine in working order. This apparent advantage was offset, however, by the fact that most of the colleges in the Conference were just as fortunate as Idaho was in returning a large number of veteran players to the game, and for this reason the relative strengths of the teams were not greatly changed.

In the early season games Idaho defeated Gonzaga College 5 to 3 after a hard battle, and later held the heavy University of Montana team to a scoreless tie.

The first Conference game was with Oregon at Moscow. Oregon had the breaks of the game and won, 13 to 0, although Idaho fought hard until the last whistle was blown. Idaho's next game was with O. A. C. and was played at Portland. O. A. C. had the strongest team it has had in years and Idaho was again defeated, 26 to 0.

In the big game, played this year at Pullman, W. S. C. reversed the score of the 1913 game, this year defeating Idaho 3 to 0. The teams were evenly matched and the game was bitterly fought from start to finish. Pullman won the victory by a goal from the field.

The last game of the season was with Whitman College at Walla Walla and resulted in a 7 to 0 victory for Idaho.

Despite the fact that only one Conference game was won, Idaho is mighty proud of her team. Coach Griffith instilled the old "Idaho Fights" spirit into his men. They never quit fighting till the last whistle blew and their opponents always knew they were in a real football game. Eight regulars of this year's team will be back next fall and prospects are bright for a successful season.

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

John Phillips, captain of the team, has played his last game for Idaho. "Buck" is a heavy, aggressive tackle, a good punter and a valuable man on the forward pass. His loss will be greatly felt next year.

William Casey, student-manager. "Spud" was manager of the team last fall. He performed his strenuous duties in an efficient manner, having had previous experience as assistant manager in 1913.

Stanley Brown, 1915 captain-elect, has played three years on the eleven. "Brownie" is one of the fastest backs on the team, a powerful line plunger and a fine defensive player. He will lead the team next fall.

Hedley Dingle, end. "Ding" won fame in the Pullman game of 1913 and has never gone back on his reputation as a fighting end. A hard tackler and a fast man down the field on punts. Has another year on the eleven.

Arthur Jardine, halfback and end. "Jar" has played two years on the team at quarterback, halfback and end and is a good man in any position. He is fast and handles the forward pass well. Graduates this year.

Roscoe Kipp, guard. Played his first game for Idaho last fall. He is heavy, a hard consistent worker, and stops many plays thru the line.

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

Harold Purdy, quarterback. "Speed" is one of the headiest field-generals in the Northwest. He ran the team with lots of snap and could always be depended on to do the right thing at the right time. Will be back next fall.

Robert Groniger, tackle. "Gronny" has two more years to play for Idaho. He is the biggest man on the team and one of the fastest. His strong point is breaking up plays. Mentioned for All-Northwest team.

Robert Burns, halfback. "Bobbie" has played three years in the backfield. He is fast and aggressive, a dangerous man in the open field and a deadly tackler on defense.

Henry DeWald, end. "Hank" has two more years on the eleven. He is fast, covers a lot of ground, and is one of the best defensive ends in the Conference. A star at breaking up interference.

Jack Hayes, center. Jack has also two more years to play for Idaho. A heavy and aggressive lineman, a sure passer and a dependable man on spread formations.

J. T. Ross, halfback. Ross starred in the Multnomah Club post-season game last year and won his "I" for the first time this season. He is fast and an exceptionally good man at carrying the ball around the ends. Has two more years on the team.

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

Much credit is due to the first string substitutes. Hamilton, Betty, and Williams showed good stuff in the backfield; T. Gerlough played a fast game at end; and Buffington and Bowers did some classy work in the line.

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

Basket Ball

ALTHOUGH Idaho had five members of her last year's East Side Championship team back in the game this year, the 1914-15 season was not as successful as it was hoped it would be. The other Conference teams were greatly strengthened and Idaho won only five of her fourteen games. Idaho played fine ball throughout the season, as the scores indicate. The team was unfortunate in losing several games by very narrow margins.

Captain Jardine and Jim Keane played the guard positions. Both were good men at breaking up plays, running the floor and shooting baskets. Keane has another year on the team.

Charlie Gray, Aden Hyde and Al Kinnison formed a trio of fast, scrappy forwards. They were good passers and could always be depended on to do their share of the scoring. Gray is captain-elect of the 1915-16 team. He led the Conference players this year in making goals from the foul line, shooting 102 baskets out of 134 tries.

"Tiny" Martinson showed lots of class at center and as a stationary guard. He always got the tip-off and had a habit of breaking up plays under the basket. Will be back next year.

Stillinger and Lomasson played in parts of games at forward and guard respectively. Both played good ball every minute they were in the game.

With six men of this year's squad back next year, the chances are fine for a winning team.

ALTHOUGH seven members of the 1913 team were back in 1914, the season was not a particularly successful one. Most of the men on the pitching staff were new and inexperienced, and at times the fielding of the team was erratic and the hitting uncertain. Idaho won only one of the eight Conference games scheduled. That the team worked very hard all season, however, is shown by the closeness of the scores in most of the games which were played. John Hayden captained the team and Robert Burns was elected captain of the 1914 team.

TRACK

Track

THE 1914 track season was one of the most successful in the history of the University. Under the direction of Coach "Hec" Edmondson, a team was developed which raised Idaho from the cellar to the top position among the colleges of the Inland Empire.

In the first meet of the season Idaho defeated the University of Montana 106 to 24, winning first place in every event on the program and taking many seconds and thirds.

The next meet was with W. S. C. at Pullman. This was one of the most exciting meets ever held in the Northwest. Before the mile relay race, the last event on the program, the score stood 64-62 in favor of W. S. C. Idaho's relay team ran a magnificent race and won the meet for Idaho, 67 to 64.

The last dual meet of the season was with Whitman, and Idaho was an easy victor, the score being 95 to 36. In the Conference meet at Pullman, the team was off-form and took only fifth place, with 19 points.

Two Idaho records were broken during the season. Lockhart went over the 120-yard hurdles in 16 $\frac{1}{5}$ seconds and DeHaven ran the two-mile race in 10 minutes 24 $\frac{1}{5}$ seconds. Captain-elect Morrison tied the college record in the 100 and the 120-yard dashes. The main point winners on the team were: In the dashes, Morrison and Massey; in the distances, DeHaven, Gerlough and Downing; in the jumps, Scott, Lockhart and Morrison; in the hurdles, Lockhart and Ross; in the weights, Captain Phillips, Groniger and Lomasson; in the pole vault, Cunningham.

Cross Country

CONSIDERABLE interest was taken last fall in cross-country running. Idaho's team, composed of Campbell O'Rourke and DeHaven, met and defeated W. S. C. over a four and one-half mile course, taking first, third and sixth places. At the Conference meet, held at Corvallis, Campbell of Idaho took fourth place. It has been voted by the A. S. U. I. to award the official track team "I" to point winners in the cross-country meets.

The Old Guard

AS USUAL, the "Old Guard was out for inspection as soon as the "regulars" were. Starting from the fire station, the Old Guard made its way past the reviewing cadets and the watching crowd and continued down town, led by the aero fleet, with the Red Cross nurses and army surgeons bringing up the rear, and occasionally rushing to the aid of some suffering comrade. On the main streets they were met with cheers from the business men, in whose honor they gave a demonstration of Butt's Manual. This was followed by inspection, for which brooms, garden hose, wooden guns, and other paraphernalia were substituted. Their efforts were rewarded with cooling ices and soft drinks by Childers Brothers, after which, having thoroughly recuperated, they tramped back up the hill to the campus. Here they repeated their inspection exercises, which were brought to an end by the collapse of one of the Red Cross nurses, who was hurried off the field of battle.

Campus Day

THE 1914 Campus Day was the most elaborate and most successful in the history of the University. The May Queen, Josephine Wayman, with her attendants, the nymphs and the several groups of dancers, representing the industries of Idaho, in her wake, descended from the garden to her seat on the steps of the Administration Building. Here the dancers grouped themselves about her to review the pageant. In this pageant was represented every department of the University, in a very unique and clever way. The Department of English gave Robin Hood on the green before the Queen and her attendants. After this processional the Queen was attended to her throne on the green under a bower of evergreen. Here the dancers held forth, the harvesters, the milkmaids, the shepherdesses, the wood-nymphs, the ore-sprites, and the Maypole merry-makers themselves. After the crowning of the May Queen, the day was given over to Class orations, tennis tournaments and a general merry-making, ending with a picnic supper on the campus and an informal "Hop" at the Gym.

The New Tradition

THE Seventeenth of March Fight is no more. In its place has sprung up a contest arranged to eliminate the unfairness and one-sidedness of our former Frosh-Soph fights. Coming as it does toward the beginning of the year, on October thirty-first, the long-continued scrapping of previous years will be removed. The contests of the day included a football game, which the Frosh won by a score of 7-0, the new Hulme contest, wrestling matches, and tug-of-war, all of which the Sophomores easily won. The celebration was ended in the quite old-fashioned way by a Bury-the-Hatchet party at the Gym for the Frosh and Sophs, while the upperclassmen took advantage of the festive occasion to hold an upperclassman dance down town. The new system worked wonderfully well at its first try-out and thus has a most objectionable feature of underclassman war been eliminated.

Today

And so Today enlisted in the ranks
Of Yesterday, and homeward turned his face,
His ebon cloak across his shoulders drawn,
He marched along with majesty and grace.
A little while the squadron marched and reached
The spacious halls of Time, and one by one,
Ere lying in their shadowed beds to rest
They showed their lord the pillage they had won.
And when Today before his father stood
And dropped his mighty pack upon the floor,
He spoke in glowing tones; Time only sighed,
'Twas just what every day had said before:
"Tomorrow's hopes, and joys of yesterday
I gathered in with one far-reaching stroke;
And, Oh! my father, it were vain to count
The moans, the groans—to count the hearts I broke
And in my pack a thousand unheard prayers
And tears of agony. A thousand fold
Of shattered hopes and heads turned white with care
Or wearied with the constant fight for gold.
And Lo! I ushered in both life and death,
I sprinkled all the land with suffering,
To every heart I brought an added care,
Nor brought I lasting joy to anything."
Thus spoke Today and in the treasure-house
Of Miser Time he emptied forth his pack,
That azure cloaked Tomorrow, starting forth,
Might fill it up again and bear it back.

A Spring Breeze

SPRING breeze drifted across the daffodils in the square opposite Mrs. Arlington's two-hundred-and-fifty-thousand dollar residence and entered an upper window on the wings of a sunbeam. The Count du Bouffon stirred uneasily in bed and sniffed the spring air. The sunshine and daffodils seemed to arouse in him pleasant reflections, for he smiled and stretched his toes in the embroidered sheets. "This is the Life!" he roared to the canary in the ornate gold cage and yawned luxuriously as he said it. Then his satisfaction seemed to decrease a trifle. He frowned and tugged at his rich brown moustache, muttering strange and fragmentary phrases, which made the canary cock his head and look at him in a curious, puzzled way.

"Such a face!" exclaimed the Count du Bouffon. "My lord! Such a face—but then there's five million behind it. Now, if I should go back—And all my trouble for nothing? Well, I guess not!—And yet it's spring, and a pretty face is worth losing five million for, when it's a case of a lifetime!" He sat up and jerked the silken bell-cord violently.

"Oh, the deuce!" he said.

In the back kitchen, the jangling of du Bouffon's bell brought the head butler to his feet in a nervous frenzy. He and Miss Eva Arlington's handsome maid were in the midst of an exceptionally pathetic emotional scene, and the electric bell unnerved him.

"Frieda," he said unsteadily, "have a heart!"

"But, Thomson, he went away without even givin' me the sparkler that he promised," sobbed the maid with fresh ardour. "Oh, my heart is broke this time for sure." Thomson patted her on the shoulder.

"Frieda," he murmured tenderly, "I'll give you a ring with a diamond as big as a pea in it." Frieda shook her shoulders violently and lifted a tear-dimmed face, beautiful with scorn.

"What are you but a butler, Mr. Thomson! I'll give you to understand that he was a gentleman, and a captain of police, too, and he had a beautiful yellow moustache that curled like a play-actor's!" She clasped her hands and grew hysterical. The count's bell continued to jangle energetically.

"Well," retorted Thomson with some warmth, "I be a butler, but for all that I be a gentleman, Frieda. I'm a self-made man. I have riz from errand boy to what you see me now, and the Lord only knows how far I'll rise afore I die. At any rate I wouldn't leave a nice girl like you, Frieda, to go back to no old-country after a small enough legacy!"

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

"I know it,—that's just you!" cried Miss Arlington's maid. "You'd just keep plodding along without any romance in you, until you rusted and fell to pieces. Now, Nels liked adventure, and if he left me and went to the old country for his uncle's money, it's none of your business, Thomson! Nels was ambitious, he was."

"Well, them may be flighty as likes to, but I stand for efficiency and service I do," and Thomson turned his steps with dignity toward the old gold and blue room, where Monsieur, the Count du Bouffon, rested his noble bones during his sojourn in the house of Arlington. Du Bouffon had met Miss Arlington on the liner returning from Europe and had been easily urged into an extended visit at her mother's home. Nobody knew much about him, but it was rumored that Miss Arlington had designs on his title, he on her millions.

The jangling bell continued more furiously and, by the time that Thomson had reached the third floor with his stately tread, the Count was in a towering rage.

"Mon dieu!" he roared, as Thomson opened the door with a solicitous "What, sir?" and he fired one of Mrs. Arlington's cut glass candlesticks at Thomson's head. Now, the chief butler's motto was efficiency and service, but he expected to be paid for it, and as his services for the Count du Bouffon were remunerative only in profuse French curses, his virtue was losing heart. So, when he caught the candlestick in mid-air, there was something new in his face besides that imperturbable calm with which he served Mrs. Arlington her soup.

"Oh, would zat I had ze good valet from Paree!" sobbed the count in his foreign accent.

"Would that you did, too, ye jabbering Frenchman!" said Thomson with a sudden fiendish inspiration. "Maybe you can afford one when ye marry Miss Arlington's millions." You see, Thomson was basely suspicious of the count's good intentions,—he had even been known to hint to the head cook that the count might be all that he pretended to be.

"Now, damn ze American insolence!" thundered the count.

"Well, it's true. Don't tell me that ye'd marry Miss Arlington for her face!"

"Who has said zat I would marry ma'm'selle, anyway?" asked the count in a new tone.

"Why, all the servants has it," said Thomson in surprise. Du Bouffon's eyes grew dreamy; he sniffed the daffodil-scented air and sighed.

"I used to know a girl—" he said.

Half an hour later Thomson pushed the count's chair gently in place at the mahogany breakfast table and stood behind it at attention. Du Bouffon's rich brown hair shone like Miss Arlington's pet mare fresh from the groom, his rich brown moustache curled like an actor's. Mrs. Arlington and her daughter bristling with negligee ribbons and laces, kept up a stream of proper conversation and fairly let their omelets cool in an attempt to interest their count, but his mind seemed distant.

"GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS '16"

"Perhaps monsieur is thinking of his beautiful France this morning?" ventured Mrs. Arlington. "Ah! how often Eva and I longed to leave this unromantic country and spend the rest of our lives in your happy land. If we only knew your musical language!" Eva sighed and clasped her skinny hands with a crisp rustling of silks and ribbons.

"If you only did," mumbled the count absently. He was looking fixedly at Miss Arlington's golden-haired maid, who had just entered the dim breakfast room with an armful of daffodils. She stopped to arrange them in an oriental bowl, and a stray sunbeam from the high windows fell across her face and lit up her shining hair. Du Bouffon half rose in his chair.

"Lord," he said, "who is that?" The Arlington ladies whirled around in their chairs in a startled way and the elder said with hauteur: "That? Oh, that is Eva's maid! Thomson, tell her that she can arrange the flowers quite as well after breakfast."

The count fell to eating his omelet with a nervous and distracted haste, which ill-befitted a gentleman of leisure and fashion, and, gulping it down, he cast a despairing glance after Thomson, as that person swaggered across the room with the air of a man who has made an important discovery.

"Frieda, begone!" said Thomson in a low and impressive voice in the ear of the maid. "After breakfast I'll tell ye somethin' in the pantry." Frieda hesitated, and then seeing Mrs. Arlington rise menacingly with a loud silken swish, darted out like a scared kitten. However, Mrs. Arlington was not thinking of Frieda just then; on the contrary she was plotting for Eva and Eva's chances of a title. She rose and made profuse excuses of urgent business.

"Thomson," she said as she reached the door. "I will see you in the library immediately." Having thus disposed of Thomson and herself, the coast was now quite clear. Eva sighed and wiped her expansive mouth with her napkin, and du Bouffon felt that now was the time to "speak up or forever hold his peace." He moved uneasily on his chair.

"Ma'm'selle Arlington—Eva—" he said passionately, taking her clammy hand. The daffodil-scented breeze stirred the heavy silk window-curtains and he broke off suddenly to say: "Tell me what your maid's name is!"

"Frieda," said Miss Arlington in a flat tone of disappointment.

"Frieda," said the count. "Frieda!" and he dropped her hand in great agitation, took three turns up and down the room, and darted out of the door.

* * * * *

The next morning Miss Arlington rang repeatedly for her maid. She was planning a morning canter thru the park with monsieur, the count, to make him forget his strange distraction of the day before and naturally wished to look her best. At last in despair she rang for Thomson, on whom she could always depend to find the tardy Frieda. He rushed in strangely dishevelled, with a mournful look in his eyes, in his right hand a crumpled note, in his left a bottle of rich, brown hair dye.

"Where is Frieda?" demanded Miss Arlington with a hostile rustling of silk, not unlike her mother when bristling for an attack. Thomson's jaded eyes rested on the note in his right hand.

"Here," he said sadly, "I suspected as much." Miss Arlington took the crumpled paper and read with increasing horror the following:

"Dear Thomson:—I am eloping tonight with Nels. He has been acting the big stiff to try and beat little Eva out of her millions; but he got his lamps on me yesterday and it was 'Good-night Millions!' Only think of us being in the same house nearly a month and not knowing it. He's dyed his moustache and hair, but he's still a peach, believe me! Please break the news gently to the Arlingtons.

Yours with love,

FRIEDA."

Miss Arlington grew pale, she tottered with a soft, silken rustle—she swooned, and fell into the arms of efficiency and service, while thru the heavy window draperies drifted a soft, spring breeze scented with daffodils.

Our Hades

UR Hades was located on the evening of January thirty-first by a visitor, led thither by the odors of burning sulphur, wafted on the night breeze to the remotest corner of the University grounds. He found it in a state of dazzling brilliancy, seemingly in the attempt to outshine in splendor the Elysian Fields where, that very night, a merry dance was in progress.

Once inside the dingy, ill-smelling place, the visitor decided that for a permanent abode he would prefer the less alluring Elysian Fields. But his was an adventurous spirit and he lingered in the deserted entrance hall until a boy, who had passed the awful judgment and was free to betake himself, with his fair lady, to the Elysian Fields, came down the stairs. From him the stranger learned that visitors could come and go in Hades, tho in these last hours of Judgment King Pluto could show him no courtesies. Thus reassured the visitor followed "the broad way that leadeth to destruction." Up, up he went; for our Hades is built on a modern plan and the ground excavations beneath it form store rooms for the fireworks and torturing devices. All who enter here must toil up many stairs because the Rulers of Darkness long ago decided that boating on the River Styx is too painless a mode of travel. With each step upward, the noises become louder, the air denser and bluer with suffocating fumes.

But bent upon adventure, he pursued his way until he came into a dark hall upon which lights beamed out of several open doors, luring, enticing him. The door he was facing was labeled "Fool's Paradise," and upon approaching, he understood it, for the room was pervaded by a sweet, fruit-like odor, similar to that in the Elysian Fields. Huge books ranging along one wall of the deserted room denoted this to be the Ruler's library and, while the visitor stood on the threshold, soothed by delightful odors, lo, another door opened and King Rhadamanthus rushed madly in, seized upon the biggest law book and consulted it frowningly. Unnoticed, the pale stranger departed, carrying with him two indelible mental pictures: one of the awful king bending over the law book, the other of the "simple balances" on a shelf along the wall, those hideous balances kept for the two fold purposes of torturing Freshmen lured into Hades and of weighing Brains and Good Efforts against Sins of Experiment, Omission and Quiz Cuts.

In the next room, a brightly lighted laboratory, young men worked sadly, silently against relentless Time. For King Pluto had decreed that those who dwelt in Hades should have until midnight on the thirty-first of January to have their deeds set down in the Record Book. So here Rhadamanthus held sway and the sad-faced youths worked on. With bowed head the visitor departed. Cries of distress led him to another laboratory where fair Tantaluses bewailed the loss of apparatuses repeatedly set up, only to disappear. Thither had they come after passing the deepest vales of the realm, to be ruled by the relentless Minus. The visitor shed a silent tear and turned away.

Now he entered the darkest realm of all Hades, that reserved for the latest comers. In the ante-chamber frenzied, haggard faces appeared to him. In one room, Minus was aiding in the work of examination, but the sight of a comely youth lying prostrate, cut down by Exhaustion and Despair, made the horrified stranger stagger away. Amid uproar and confusion he entered the hall in which King Pluto sat enthroned, surrounded by subjects awaiting judgment. Pluto was bending over his Record Book, unmindful of all save the one at the Bar of Judgment. "What amount had you in the beginning?" his voice sounded over the tumult. In cold figures was the answer recorded. "And what yield of product do you return to me?"

But the visitor, sick of adventure, retraced his steps rapidly, thankful that his record was not required by Pluto that night.

At The Ferry

HERE is night in the east, there is mist o'er the sea,
And waiting, I sit on the shore,
And I list for the sound of the ferryman's boat,
That is coming to carry me o'er.
Back there on the isle, there is music of flutes,
'Tis the piper who plays, I know;
He is calling me back to the land of the dance;
Let him call, but I never shall go.
I, too, loved the dance, and I yielded myself
To the mad music's rhythm and sway,
But I wearied. I wait for the ferryman's boat
That is coming to take me away.
I do not await him in robes of pure white;
My garments are spotted with mire.
They are stained with the wine that we drank at the dance,
And are torn by the thorn and the brier.
Yet I trust that the ferryman will not refuse
To carry me thus from the throng,
For he knows, best of all, how the piper can tempt;
He is merciful, though he is strong.
There is mist on the wave, there is night overhead,
It is dark and no more can I see,
But sooner or later I'll hear the soft splash
Of the boat that is coming for me.

A Prayer

I only pray for vision, that I may,
In my fellow men, engrossed with busy care,
Have glimpses of their inner natures there,—
Have insight into souls deep-hidden away
Behind their masks of pride: that day by day
I may see truly; that I may be fair
To flashes from within which I may share,—
To answering deeps in me that theirs betray,
Then shall I gentleness infinite find
For those who seem indifferent or unkind,
Knowing the selves I see do but conceal
A hungry wistfulness for friendship real.
No nature but has nobleness untold;
No spirit but has inner wells of gold.

Professor Gail—"Who was Theophrastus?"

Manhard—"He is an Aquatic Plant."

Dr. Collins—"Who wrote 'Idylls of the King?'"

Sig Sieler—"Shakespeare."

Professor Hulme (in History Class)—"Red-haired people are sacred to the God Thor. Now what would you think was the reason?"

Student—"Because it looks like lightning."

Miss Mellison—"Huh! It looks more like thunder to me."

EVEN A PROFESSOR WILL SPRING HIS JOKE

Prof. Lewis—"I once played baseball, but for some reason or other I always made a fool out of myself."

Vic Jones—"Why don't you come out and coach the team?"

Prof. Lewis—"Why, Jones, I don't think you need any coaching."

PROFESSOR GAIL BECOMES POETIC

ONLY AN ECONOMICS SHARK CAN GET THIS JOKE

Dorothy Taylor—"Are there really such things as bank notes and greenbacks?"

Lewis—"Yes."

Dorothy T.—"I've never seen any."

Lewis—"That is your extreme hard luck, Miss Taylor."

YOU NEVER CAN TELL WHAT WILL HAPPEN

Frosh—"Who won the basket ball championship, Mr. Favre?"

Favre—"Oh, Mr. Bender and I have decided in favor of W. S. C."

HEARD BY AN INNOCENT BYSTANDER

Palouse Farmer—"Is that old man out there with the football boys their teacher?"

Freshman—"No, sir. That's 'Baldy' Johnstone."

She—"How does it happen that Eddie Coram gets such good grades?"

He—"He never gets a Con any more."

Frosh—"Sir, there's a Bill Collector at the door."

"He hasn't lost it, has he?"

"No."

"Of course I would, you silly girl."

SHE WAS ONLY AN ORDINARY WOMAN

"Of course you understand, dear, that our engagement must be kept secret."

She—"Oh, yes. I tell everybody that."

IS IT POSSIBLE? A TEACHER, TOO

"Say, have you got your education?"

Senior—"No, I haven't got any education since I've been in this class."

AG MATHEMATICS

Egleson (in Freshman Agronomy)—The area of cultivated land devoted to corn is fifty-one per cent.

Professor Robb—Where does wheat rank?

Egleson—There is a greater area of wheat than corn.

Professor Hulme—What do you think of Mona Lisa? Do you think you would like to have her for a friend?

Tingley—No, I'm afraid she would be too quiet.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION

In a discussion of the Norsemen one Freshman says their education seems to have been entirely with weapons.

THIS YOUNGSTER HAILS FROM LEWISTON

In Lewiston everything looks substantial; the sleek business men are everywhere doing business, selling homes to people who come looking for a warm country. In Moscow the people are mostly farmers coming in to buy a few provisions at the few paltry stores who are doing business.

Beowulf first seized a sleeping Thane, tore him up, bit into his back bone, drank his blood, and swallowed him piece by piece.

As Beowulf pulled the sword from her body, the vile blood melted the blade and dropped off in huge icicles.

N. M. Yes, it is all right to wear an "I" sweater. A red sweater with a white "I" is very beautiful but a white sweater with a red "I" is more becoming to a small girl.

Inquirer: Owing to the fact that both Mr. Gregory and Mr. Beier are subscribers to this publication, we do not wish to answer your question as to who is the luckiest man in college.

J. J. Surely it is all right if you have dates with other boys. We all realize how Ever(1)y one feels toward a childhood friend.

Bob. After diagnosing your case very thoroughly we have come to the conclusion that your poor health is not due to being in love. You are just growing old. Our advice is to never appear upon the campus without a Keane.

Pat. You say the girl jilted you. We are very sorry. How did you get up courage enough to ask her?

Hester: You wish to know what we would advise a poor tired girl who has spent a hard day in the class room. Realizing that you are overcome with too much work we advise you to take a Holaday.

Dorm Girl. It is indeed pleasing to know that there is one girl in school who does not talk too much. But if you are determined to talk more some very good advice may be obtained from either Miss Curtis or Mr. Huff.

A letter has just been received from a gentleman who signs his name "Buckand Jar." He wishes to know the best remedy for Hay fever. If it is a bad case we can offer no remedy.

Jack. You have received the following telegram and wish to know what action we should take upon it:

Boise, Ida., Apr. 23, 1914.

Capt. Adams,

Moscow, Idaho.

Late developments in Mexico make it necessary to order out national guard and volunteers. I take you at your word and wire you with much regret that this action becomes necessary. Report at once to Major Hendron at Fort Wright. Further orders from him. God bless you and grant that you may return alive. Gov. Haines.

We should bid the girl good bye at once and hit for Canada.

Burd W. We do not compose English Jokes. We recommend Con's Gyde.

"Tubby." We very seldom answer correspondents who do not give their real name. In this case, as you are a friend of Ola's, we shall answer. It will be all right to grow a moustache as soon as you are a Senior. But who has ever seen moss growing on a tub?

Ben Hamil. We seldom indulge in questions concerning gracefulness and beauty. We suggest that you consult Lillian Russell if you have not already done so.

A FEW DON'TS FOR THE BOYS

(PLEASE LEARN)

- Do not attend the Jitney Struggles.
- Do not speak to a lady upon the street unless her chaperone is present.
- Do not stay out later than six-thirty on Sunday evenings.
- Do not walk upon the campus after dark.
- Do not stroll upon week days. (Chaperones must have some time to hate themselves.)
- Do not bid the ladies good night in the near vicinity of the Dorm or Sorority Houses. If you must say good night, stand on the street, under the arclight, and yell, only loud enough for the lady to hear.
- Do not have more than two dates with the same girl during one semester, and these not less than six weeks apart, because it is not wise to become infatuated.
- Do not squeeze her hand on parting, simply mutter, "Swell time; glad it didn't rain; so long."
- Do not attend the Co-Ed dance unless you are sufficiently chaperoned.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR THE GIRLS

- Do not walk more than a mile out of town with your escort, he might become fatigued. Also never walk far by yourselves, especially in the direction of the cemetery—you might become frightened.
- Do not take your tatting to Assembly.
- Do not talk to gentlemen in the hallways, you might be late for class.
- Do not gaze into the pool hall. You might see him there.
- Do not chew gum in the classroom unless someone has given it to you.
- Do not ask a man for his fraternity pin. He may have already promised it.
- Do not talk back to your Professors; they will think you are sassy.
- Do not forget to ring the door bell if you arrive too late.
- Do not call a man up on the telephone; he might think you had a case on him. Have your chaperone do it.
