GEM OF THE MOUNTAINS

“Alma Mater, lamp of knowledge,
Held to eager outstretched hands,
Children keep this lamp so glorious
Trimmed to guide the seeking ones.
May we stand through time eternal
Firm in our course as the sun.”

The University of Idaho

As the crown or capstone of the State's educational system stands the University. Even as the law of gravity makes it impossible for a stream of water to rise above its source, so the law of mental and spiritual forces makes it impossible for the level of intelligence, of knowledge, of culture, and of public service throughout the state to rise higher than the level at which these ideals stand in the fountain head of the state's educational order.

This means a strong, virile, broad-minded, idealistic and yet practical faculty, but far more it means a student body fired with the same ideals, who shall go out to serve the commonwealth of Idaho in lines as diverse as human activity itself. But diverse as their activities must needs be, the sons and daughters of "Idaho" must have this in common that they are motivated neither by rank individualism which disregarding the rights and claims of others looks upon society and the state as legitimate prey, nor by the iridescent dream of socialistic communism in which sloth would be rewarded and intelligent initiative and industry robbed of its legitimate return.

The University graduate must go back to his community better equipped in mind and body to meet the demands of the hour, better fitted to discharge the duties of citizenship, of fatherhood and motherhood, and better prepared to earn an honest livelihood, which is perhaps the first and highest duty which the individual owes to the state.

The University graduate must be neither a reactionary, unable to see defects in the present social order, nor yet a revolutionary who regards chaos as the remedy for imperfection. He should be in the third class—a humanitarian, concerned with people rather than with things, and more desirous of fulfilling his obligations than of asserting his right.

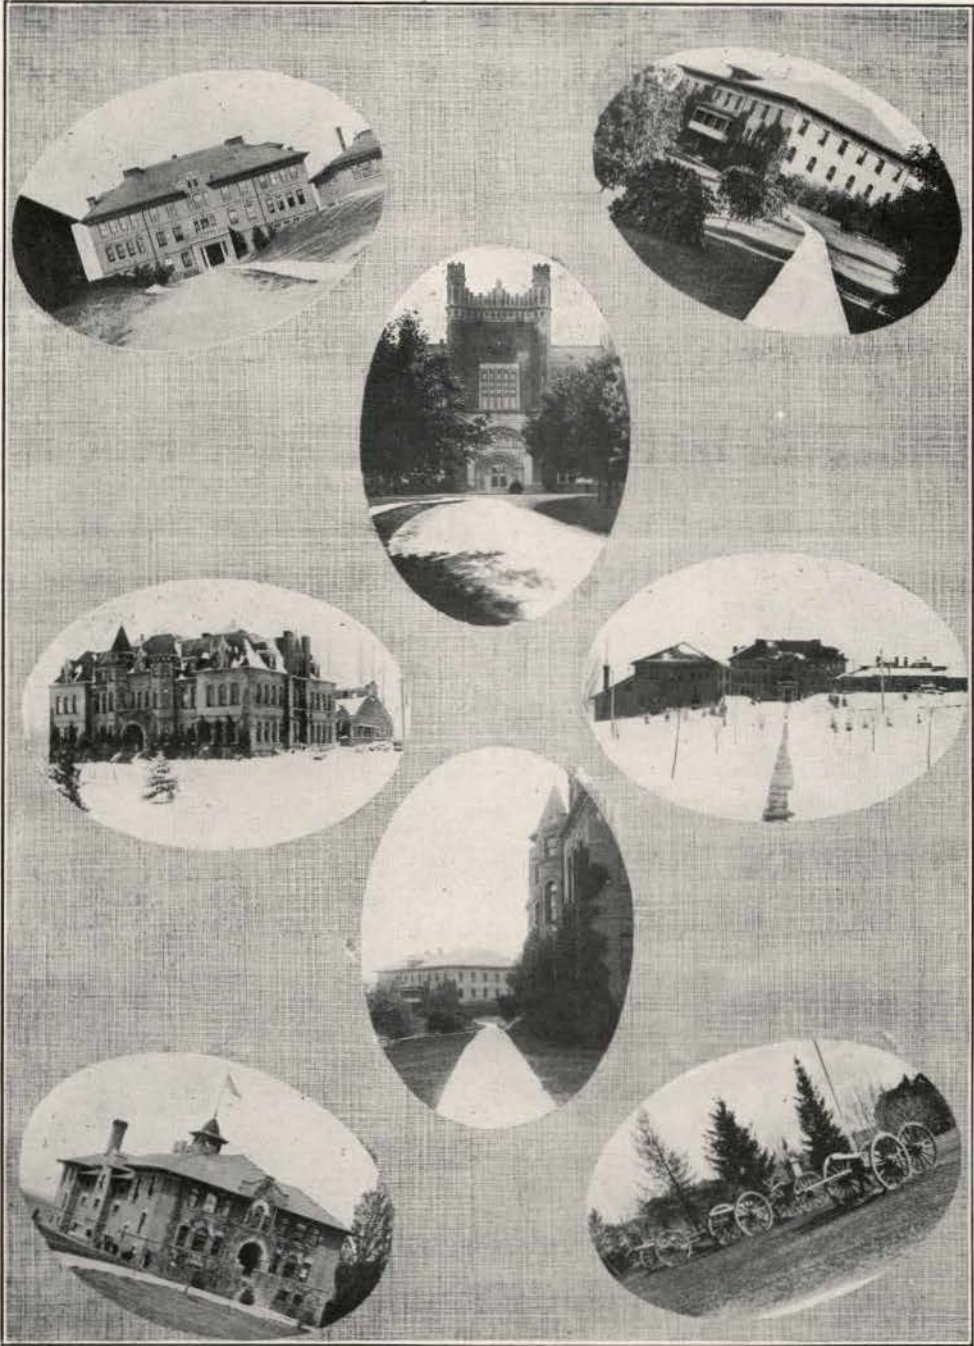

"Idaho" is proud of the record her sons have made in the great war, and she is confident that the record of her sons and daughters in the "great peace" will be worthy of her soldier dead.

With these ideals embedded firmly in their minds, the University students, as they become members of the distinguished alumni of their Alma mater—who are already wielding a powerful influence for good in this young frontier state—will add new lustre to the fame of their University and will raise the level of manhood and of womanhood in our fair land, and this will be true irrespective of whether their field for service be found 'mid the forests and mines of the north, or the smiling plains of the south, or in the mountain fastnesses and deep canyons which lie between them.

FRANCIS A. THOMSON.

The Literary Society of the School of Practical Agriculture is an organization of Short Course students maintained for the purpose of giving its members opportunity for self improvements in the art of debate and public speaking, for the promotion of better acquaintanceship and for the development of school spirit. Membership is open to all students of the school. Meetings are held every two weeks throughout the school year. At each meeting a program is rendered consisting of debates, extemporaneous speaking, recitations, addresses, music, reading of the "Howl," a collection of student comments on the life of the school, and a critique.

GENERAL E. R. CHRISMAN

Military Department

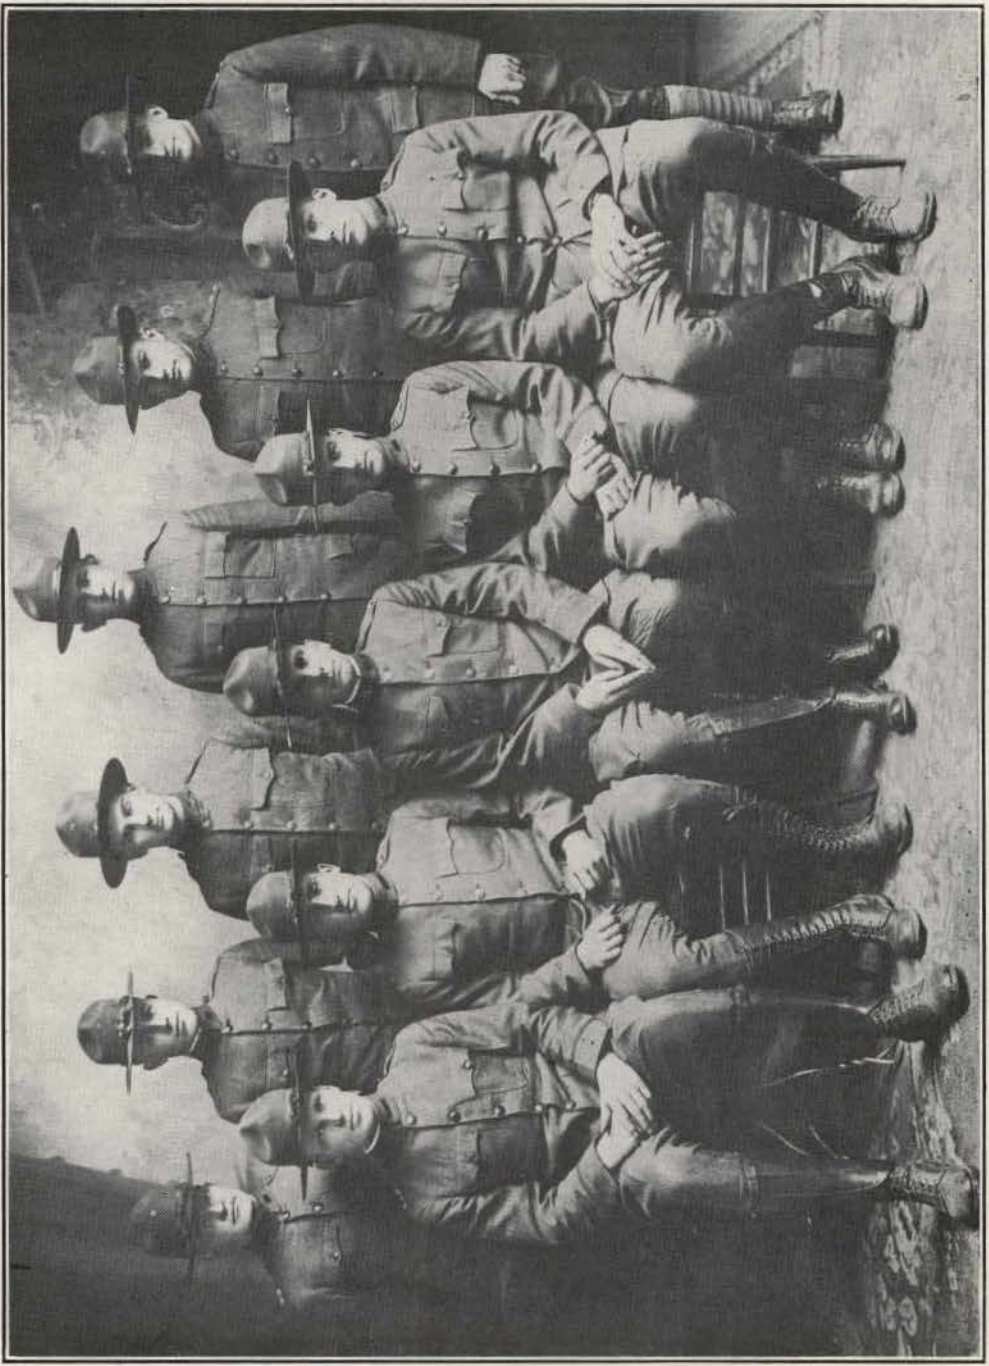

The University has been most fortunate in having as Professor of Military Science and Tactics an ideal military man, a man with many years of practical experience and training in the Infantry of the United States Army. General E. R. Chrisman has had charge of troops in Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and at various posts within the boundaries of the United States.

The most difficult circumstances to be met with in the reorganization of college work after the world war was found in the Military Department. General Chrisman has made remarkable progress in the re-establishment of pre-war conditions in the Cadet Battalion. He has executed the complex schedule designed for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and has developed a keen interest in the cadets toward their work in the department.

A most desirable harmony exists between the Military Department and the Cadet Battalion. With the new regulations governing commissions in the Reserve Officers' Corps, Idaho may justly look forward with the hope of seeing many of her graduates enrolled in that branch of the service.

Assisting the Military Department are Sergeant Thomas F. Weldon, in charge of all Government property, and Sergeant Eugene Nagele, in charge of a large part of the clerical work. Both of these gentlemen are esteemed by the student body as efficient leaders and loyal "Gem Staters."

Our University at War

A University at war is seemingly a contradiction, but like many contraries the University of Idaho became as effective and efficient in its negative as in its positive form. When our country cast her lot with the Allies in the spring of 1917 our University did not turn militant over night, in fact, she did no startling or unusual thing. The change was gradual. Perhaps the transition was more apparent when viewed in detail than in the perspective. Our total enrollment at that time was 676, 425 of whom were men. Gradually the men began to disappear from our Campus until when school closed in June we resembled a young ladies' select seminary rather than the co-educational institution of this commonwealth. A possible explanation of our gradual transition may lie in the fact that the University of Idaho is a land grant college, which means that military drill is required of all under classmen. This drill is compulsory with all men in their first two years of college life and optional with upper classmen. Consequently, we were somewhat accustomed to the outward manifestations of the military drill, etc., so that the intensification of such did not shock us into the realization of war as the sudden appearance of such would have done. We were, in a measure, prepared.

Perhaps the first breath of war came with the order for the mobilization of the old National Guard in Boise, about April 25th, a few weeks after the declaration of war. The Idaho National Guard, which had just returned from six months' service on the Mexican border, was composed for the most part of young men, many of whom were attending the University at the time the call for mobilization was issued. The University students who were members of the guard left school at once and were assembled at the capital of the state, at old Fort Boise. The Guard remained there for a few weeks until the I. W. W. menace to the farm crops in the northern part of the State became so serious that the National Guard was detailed to do guard duty in the north. In the late summer these men were again reassembled in Boise, and on September 10th the National Guard, with its quota of University students, left Boise en route for Camp Green, Charlotte, N. C., where it was divided into Artillery and Engineering Corps, becoming 146th Field Artillery and 116th Engineers in the 41st Division. Later these men were sent to Camp Mills, New York, their point of embarkation, and about Thanksgiving time of 1917 the Idaho boys, in the Rainbow Division, set sail for France. These were the first Idaho men to reach the front, and they were at Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel, and in the Meuse and Argonne.

The second military order that had much effect on the University was the issuance of the first call for the Officers' Training Corps to be held at the Presidio. All men with two or more years of military training under the provisions of the land grant colleges were eligible. On May 1st, 1917, fifty University of Idaho men left Moscow for the Presidio, where after some three months of intensive training they were given provisional commissions, which graduated after many transfers into commissions in the National Army.

The University closed June 5th and did not reopen again until October 1, 1917. The late opening was due to the fact that Idaho is essentially an agricultural state, and the young men were needed on the farms to to harvest the crops that were to aid in feeding our Allies. It was not until school had actually opened that we saw the change. There were no upper clasmen, and a University without upper classmen is usually regarded as a ship without a rudder. The older University men were gone, as were the younger faculty. It was up to the new generation to take hold in the emergency and do their best in managing student affairs. The effect of the war was being felt in many directions. We began to notice the difference in all our activities, athletics for once were almost forsaken, social functions were simple and inexpensive and thrift stamps were taking the place of chewing gum. There were no longer any classes in Hygiene; there were classes in First Aid and Home Nursing. This was typical of the change that had come over our University. We were a quieter, a more earnest and serious group, a much older group than we had been three months before.

In December of this year twenty-five men left the University for the Officers' Training Corps at Fort Riley, Kansas. Many of these men later transferred to the Aviation Corps.

A month later, in January of 1918, fifty men were drafted from our college and left immediately for Camp Lewies. After this the enrollment remained fairly steady until the close of college in June.

Again school did not reopen until October due to the crop situation, but in the meantime the registration of all men between eighteen and forty-five had taken place, and the formation of the S. A. T. C. was under way. When we returned in the fall of '18 there existed on the Idaho Campus a condition that had not existed in the previous year and a half—once more there were more men at old Idaho than girls, for the S. A. T. C. numbered over six hundred men. Section A, the collegiate section, was quartered on the campus, and for its convenience all fraternity houses and even the gymnasium were requisitioned and temporarily turned into barracks. Section A began its rather difficult career, that of combining military life with a college education. To us on the side lines, it seemed a hopeless task for we had found it difficult to absorb college work minus all other distractions.

Section B, the Vocational Section, was quartered in town. But school had scarcely gotten under way, and sufficient language teachers to instruct the future fire-eaters in rudimentary French had scarcely been secured when the influenza made its first appearance among us. Realizing the seriousness of the situation, every effort was made to check the scourge from the time of its first appearance on our campus. The University proper was closed for six weeks, though, in reality, this did not affect the S. A. T. C., as that organization drilled and attended classes. However, a very severe and effective quarantine was placed on the whole campus. No one was permitted to enter or leave the campus. "Fraternizing" between the men and women students was forbidden. Due to the efficient and business like handling of the flu situation at the University by the Medical Corps and Miss Permeal French, Dean of Women, the plague was prevented from taking the awful toll of life that other institutions suffered. Emergency hospitals were immediately opened, and thanks to the vigilant manner in which the situation was handled but ten deaths resulted.

News of the Armstice on November 11th sounded the death knell of the S. A. T.

C. throughout the country before it had actually had a fair trial. Whether or not it was ranked as a success in other institutions, the S. A. T. C. at the University of Idaho was ranked as first in the Northwest Division and as far above the average in its military, medical and academic department. The men were demobilized before Christmas vacation and so ended the short lived S. A. T. C.

So much for the University during the actual period of the war. This scattered and rather barren perspective covers a multitude of heroic action and sacrifice, but the actual statistics probably tell a far clearer story and give a more accurate estimate of the University's real contribution to the war.

A fairly accurate computation places the number of University Alumni who saw service, in one capacity or another, during the period of the war, at 1500 men. Of this number it is estimated that about forty were killed in action or died of disease while in training. Of the officers, which included one colonel, three lieutenant colonels and six majors. Among the officered men from this institution the best known is Colonel A. J. MacNab, recognized world authority on the use of small arms, who was a student at the University in 1898, at which time he enlisted in the Spanish-American war. His record during this war was such that he was transferred to the Graduate Infantry and Cavalry School, from which he graduated in 1904. His military record has been long and brilliant.

Among those whose exceptional services gained recognition and who were decorated for their services were: Lieutenant R. E. Everly, D. S. C.; Homer Youngs, D. S. C.; Major Loran L. Browne, Croix de Guerre, D. S. C.; Major "Dutch" Downing, Croix de Guerre; Lieutenant Harry MacDougal, Croix de Guerre, D. S. C.

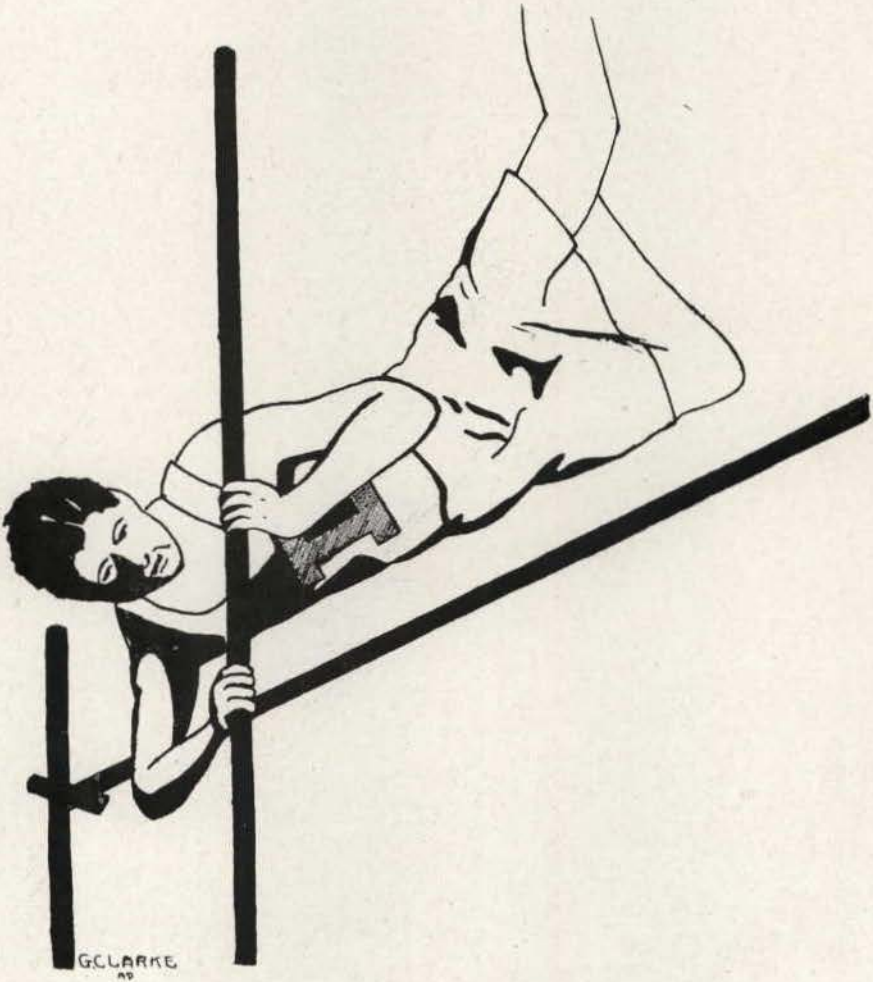

But the University men in blue must not be excluded or overshadowed by the men in khaki. Although they were few in number, their service was no less valiant and valuable. The men from our University who enlisted in the Navy were in various departments. Ensign Ralph Breshears and Jess Wade were in N. O. T. service at Norfolk, Va.; Bryan Bedwell was stationed on Submarine F3; Rex Kimmell was in transport service, Ensign Carl Carlson pay corps in U. S. N., 39 Broadway, New York City, and several others were stationed along the coast on guard duty.

The women of the University rendered service to their country in a manner not less gallant than the men, although their services were mainly in their own communities. War found them trained for emergencies that soon indicated them to be leaders. They undertook to accomplish every necessary and essential phase of war activity that was within their scope, whether it was Red Cross work, conservation or war gardening. Miss Helen Denecke had charge of the Hostess House in France. Miss Fleeta Brennan worked for two years in canteen service in San Francisco. Among other women of this University whose services were conspicuous are: Lar Verne Borelle, Bird Wall, Florence Stephenson and Katherine Pitcarian.

This brief story is but a synopsis of the contribution of our University to her country in time of war. Men and women who designate Idaho as their Alma Mater, alike, were eager to serve in whatever capacity they seemed best fitted. And as can be said of them so can it be said of the University, "She served wherever service was most needed."

THE 1919 VARSITY SQUAD

The 1919 Football Season

With the schedule turned wrong way to, and the big games all at the beginning of the season, Idaho had only a partially successful football season. Defeated in the first three games, the team came back strong and won the two remaining contests with comparative ease. Unfortunately for Idaho's prospects, at an early season scrimmage several first string men sustained lasting injuries that slowed down the team from the start.

Outweighed almost 15 pounds to the man, and with a crippled lineup, the team went down to defeat 27 to 6 at the hands of the University of Oregon in the initial game of the season. In the first eight minutes of play "Turk" Gerlough went over for Idaho's touchdown and the fans had rosy visions of the ending of the fatal Oregon "jinx." Within three minutes, however, Oregon had evened the score.

With the count 6 to 6 at the end of the first half weight began to tell, and in the third quarter two more Oregon touchdowns were shoved across. In the fourth quarter, following a series of end runs that put the ball within striking distance, the Web-footers tore through for still another, bringing the score to 27 to 6.

The next week the team went to Salt Lake City, where they met the University of Utah eleven and were defeated, 20 to 0. A drizzling rain made the soft grass field even slower and there were few spectacular plays. The team seemed to get off on the wrong foot, and had they displayed later season form should have won the contest easily. Utah scored in the first quarter on a fumble by Idaho, but were held until the last period, when they got away with two more touchdowns.

The following week came the annual clash with our time-honored rival, Washington State. The Cougar team, fresh from victories over California U. and Multnomah A. C., proved too much for the Idaho eleven, and the game was lost by the largest score of the season, 37 to 0.

The game was played in the rain, in a sea of mud, the slippery ball causing frequent and costly fumbles. Idaho played practically the whole contest on the defensive, but made large gains at times when she did take the offensive.

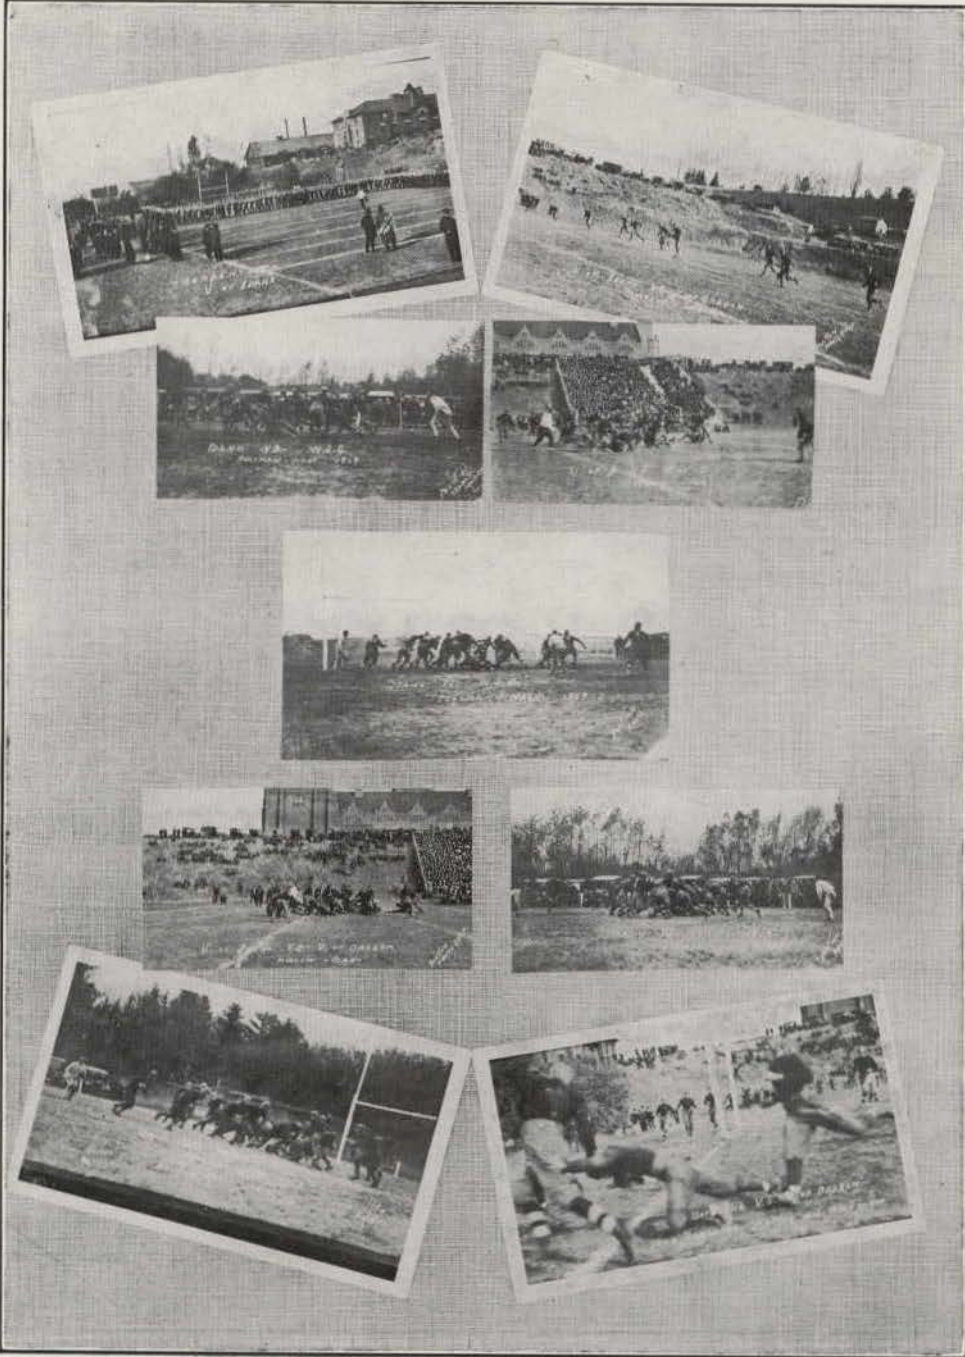

The first quarter was scoreless, and it was not until near the end of the second that the first count was made by W. S. C. Three times they carried the ball to the Idaho five-yard line, but could not put it over. At the fourth trial they shoved through Idaho's fighting linesmen and managed to cross the goal. The third quarter was the most disastrous for Idaho, but as the game wore on the Idaho defense stiffened and during the last quarter W. S. C. was held scoreless.

Idaho easily smashed their way through the Montana eleven for the first win of the season, outyardaging and outplaying the visitors, with a 7 to 0 score as a meager indication of the relative football abilities of the teams. Idaho was easily superior, and two more touchdowns were lost on technicalities.

Doped to lose, Idaho, by better football tactics and physical prowess, walloped Gonzaga in the final game of the season, 13 to 7. At only two periods of the game did the Gonzaga team show pep enough to check the consistent Idaho advances, at the beginning of the second half and throughout the last quarter, when they fought desperately to even the score.

At none of these times, however, was the Idaho goal really endangered, nor was it necessary at any time for a substitution to be made against the scrappy Gonzaga team. This shows beyond doubt that the good condition of the Idaho men, after their first injuries had passed, could be relied upon, had their best games come at the last.

"Plasty" spends his summers playfully juggling railroad ties so a gentle game like football never phases him. He is a sure passer and a bear on defense.

Injuries hampered "Tommy" this season but he tore things up just the same. He hits the line hard.

"GROVE" EVANS

CAPTAIN LINDLEY

The Basketball Season

The University of Idaho basketball team played eighteen games in the 1920 season and won eleven, finishing fourth in the Northwest Conference. The Vandals scored 476 against 412 for all opponents. Hunter was high point man of the season, scoring 98 points on field goals, and throwing 82 out of 133 fouls. Perrine comes second with 86 on field baskets and four on fouls. Three men, Cozier, Fox and Perrine, made their varsity letters in basketball for the first time. A strong team is assured for next year, with every man returning except Captain "Prex" Lindley, who will be lost by graduation. Moe, all-Northwest forward, kept out for the season by injuries, will be back.

Idaho opened the season by winning two games from the Potlatch Athletic Club in the Potlatch gymnasium. The team then met Washington State, Willamette and Montana at Moscow, losing only to Washington State. The next week the Vandals turned the tables and decisively defeated the same team on its home floor.

With high hopes after walking over the Cougars, the team set out on the Coast trip. They met the University of Washington, Multnomah Athletic club, Oregon Agricultural College, Willamette and Whitman on their home floors, winning four out of the seven games.

Following the Coast trip, the Idaho squad set out for Montana, where they played the University of Montana and the Montana School of Mines. With Montana they broke even, winning one and losing one, but were defeated by the School of Mines. This disastrous trip cost Idaho the Conference championship. Had the team shown up its best against Montana it would still have had a fighting chance for first honors.

The record of games is as follows:

Wrestling

Wrestling as a sport saw its first season at Idaho this year, and from the showing made and the interest aroused, there can be no doubt but that it has come to stay. The team took part in only two matches, losing both, but this was not discouraging considering the infancy of the sport.

The first contest was held at Pullman and Idaho lost by the one-sided score of 12 to 1. Too rigid restricting was responsible for Idaho's poor showing. "Babe" Brown lost on a so-called "rolling fall" to a much inferior man.

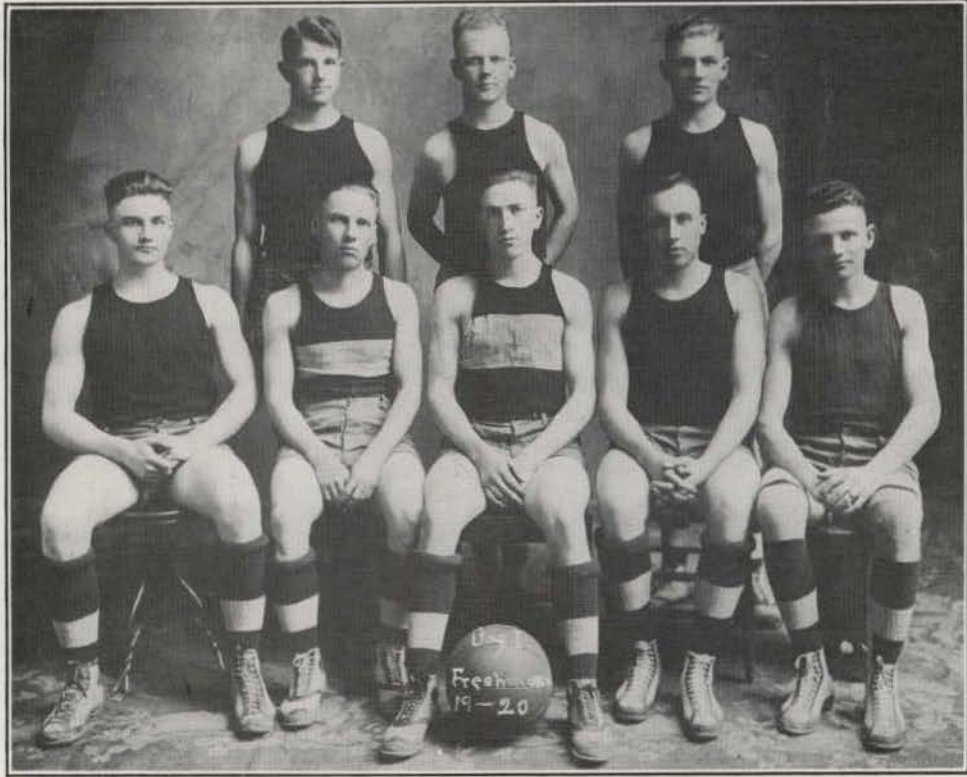

The second match came off in the Idaho gym and only a fluke prevented a victory for the silver and gold. This came when Smith, in the 158-pound class, threw his man, but because they were off the mat it did not count as a fall. Idaho should have won, 7 to 6. As it ended the score was 6 to 5 in favor of Washington State. Brown threw his former opponent with little effort.

Freshman Athletics

This year's Freshman teams were of an exceedingly high order, and if a good beginning is any criterion, many of the first year men will be strong recruits for varsity positions next year. Their special mission is to furnish scrimmage for varsity teams, and they fulfilled their duties this year, almost too well in the case of football.

Under the able tutelage of coach "Pip" Dingle the football team played four games, winning two, tying one and losing one. They won from both North Central and Lewis and Clark high schools of Spokane and tied once and lost once to the W. S. C. Freshmen.

In basket ball the team went through the season with only one defeat, losing the first game with the W. S. C. first year men, but out matching them in the second. They were easily victorious over Moscow High School's state champions and Culdesac High School.

The season's games are given below:

STATE CHAMPIONS

Interscholastic Basketball Tournament

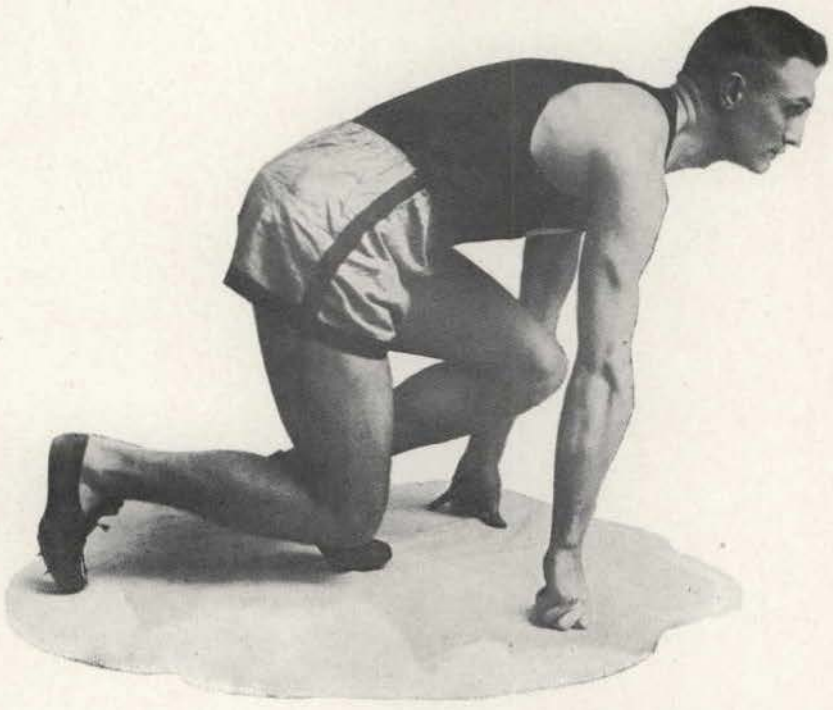

Eight teams, victors in as many inter-sectional tournaments, took part in the annual interscholastic tournament held in the University gymnasium on March 18th and 19th. The schools represented were: Moscow, Twin Falls, Boise, Aberdeen, CULdesac, Driggs, Wallace and Coeur d'Alene.

The Moscow High School team, three times state champions, won the state title for the fourth consecutive year and clearly demonstrated its superiority over all competitors. Elimination games were run off on the 18th, and Twin Falls and Moscow were victorious in the semi-finals the next day. Driggs, the expected "dark horse," fell at the hands of Moscow, and Wallace lost in a close game to Twin Falls. In one of the fastest and most hotly contested high school games ever seen at Idaho, Moscow defeated the southern town, 34 to 14. Twin Falls was awarded the runners-up cup and Driggs captured the cup for sportsmanship.

The Track Season

The 1919 season was one of the most successful years for track in the history of the University. Idaho, in a very closely contested meet, walked away with the Northwest Conference track title. The team took part in only two meets during the season, a dual meet with W. S. C. and the Conference meet at Pullman, though Niel Irving was later sent to the Pacific Northwest meet at Portland.

Seconds and thirds gave Washington State a victory in the dual meet on May 10. Captain Jack Richmond won the sprint events easily, with Moe finishing third. McCallie ran away from the much-touted Parker in the 440, and Moe won a close race in the 220-yard hurdles. Howard ran the high hurdles, and in spite of a badly poisoned leg was able to take second place. Irving heaved the shot and javelin far away for firsts in both events. He took second in the discus and came out high point man for Idaho.

exciting ever staged. The entire affair was a battle between Idaho and W. S. C. Richmond was again easily victor in the sprints and McCallie ran perhaps the prettiest race of the day, finishing first in the 440. Irving, Idaho's stellar weight man, was high point man of the meet with three firsts. Not content with this, he shattered two Idaho records. He broke his own record in the shot put with a heave of 42 feet 9 inches and flung the discus 127 feet 9 inches.

Before the relay, the final event, Idaho led W. S. C. by one point. Idaho did not place in the relay and W. S. C. finished second, but their last runner failed to bring in the baton. This gave W. S. C. the meet 44 to 42. Coach Bleamaster immediately filed a protest and it was carried to the advisory committee of the I. A. A. A., who decided in favor of Idaho. This made the final score: Idaho 42, W. S. C. 41.

After the end of the intercollegiate track season a general Pacific Northwest Championship meet was called at Portland. As the other members of the team were more or less out of shape Idaho sent only one man, Irving. Sixteen schools and clubs were represented, yet Idaho's man took third in the meet by his single efforts. He took first in the javelin, shot put and discus and was again individual point winner.

The 1919 Baseball Season

CAPTAIN EDWIN C. RETTIG

Little interest was taken in baseball last season, due principally to the scarcity of good material and to the unusual interest taken in track, which came at the same time. Only two games were played and no letters were awarded, due, of course, to the fact that none of the team had played the required amount of time. Captain Rettig was easily the individual star of the team, with Thomas showing up next.

Repeated errors and poor batting by Coach Bleamaster's inexperienced nine cost them both games with Washington State. Rettig pitched good ball in the first game and struck out six. In the second game his place was taken by Sandberg and later by Buescher, both of whom were no match for W. S. C.'s sluggers.

THE TEAM

Rettig, Sandberg, Beuscher—Pitchers.	Thomas—Catcher.
O'Brien—Shortstop.	Weber—Right field.
McCrea—First base.	Kinney—Center field.
Hunter—Second base.	Almquist—Left field.
Moore—Third base.

Tennis

In tennis Idaho was represented by Bill Denecke, "Stub" Almquist and "Ken" Hunter. Denecke and Hunter composed the doubles team and Almquist took care of the singles. The Conference tourney at Pullman was the only contest held during the season. The team went to the meet with the understanding that each school was to be represented by a singles man and a doubles team, but when the matches started each man had to play a round in the singles. The team was eliminated in the singles by Whitman, when Almquist lost, 6—2 and 6—3, Hunter was defeated, 6—1 and 6—3, and Denecke lost, 2—6, 6—4 and 7—5. Whitman took the singles championship by winning two out of three matches with Washington State.

In the doubles the next day, the Pullman team disposed of Hunter and Denecke in straight sets, 6—3, 6—1 and 9—7. By defeating Whitman in the next round, 6—4, 6—4, 6—4, W. S. C. annexed the doubles honors.

Tennis has never been much of a sport at Idaho, and this was the first year the school was represented in intercollegiate competition, so results are not discouraging. The Idaho team put up a game fight, but was simply outmatched.

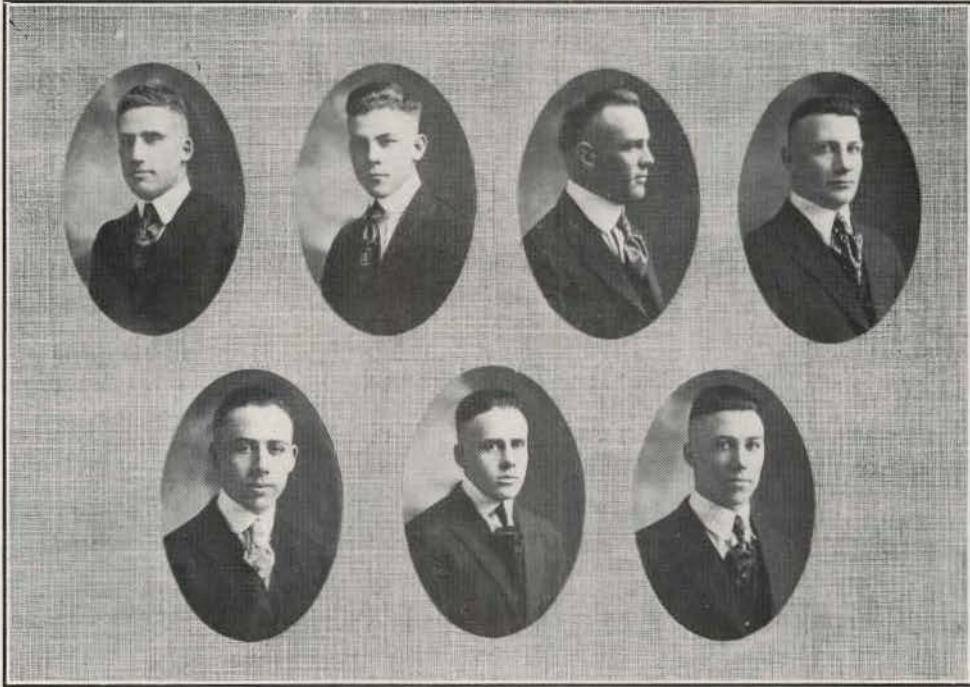

Women's Athletics

Organized women's athletics were started at the University for the first time this spring and practically all of the co-eds are taking an active part in them. February 25 one hundred and fifty girls met in the gymnasium and the greatest spirit and enthusiasm were shown. An inter-group basketball tournament was arranged for and it was decided that an out-door girls' meet should be held later in the spring. Tennis, hiking, out-door hockey and baseball will also be entered into. If the proposed swimming pool is secured competitive swimming will be scheduled.

The girls plan to organize a strong local association and an attempt may be made at some future date to affiliate with the National Women's Athletic Association. Irene A. Watson, assistant professor of Physical Education, who has been doing wonders with the girls' gym classes, is directing the movement.

The co-eds so far have shown fine spirit and support and there is no doubt but that the plan will be a complete success. The wide variety of sports offers an opportunity for every girl in college, and they have not been slow in taking advantage of it.

The athletic board has general supervision over all athletics and the granting of varsity letters. It is composed of seven undergraduates elected each spring to serve for one year. Though not directly specified in the constitution it is customary to elect only men who have made their letters in some major branch of athletics. It has always been the policy of the A. S. U. I. to have each major sport represented.

Traditions

The traditions of a University are those things which tighten the bonds between the Alumni and their Alma Mater and which cause the undergraduates to feel that in carrying out these traditions they are linking themselves with those students who have been before and with those students who are yet to come. Idaho is peculiarly blessed in her traditions.

The Freshman wears his green cap, not as an emblem of degradation, but with the full knowledge that generations of freshmen before him have done the same. To him it is as much of a badge of honor and a mark of class distinction as the corduroys of the Junior or the sombrero and cane of the Senior. He knows that, when he swings the senior cane, to him alone will be granted the privilege of sitting on the "I" bench. To him also shall the joys of the "Senior Sneak" be known.

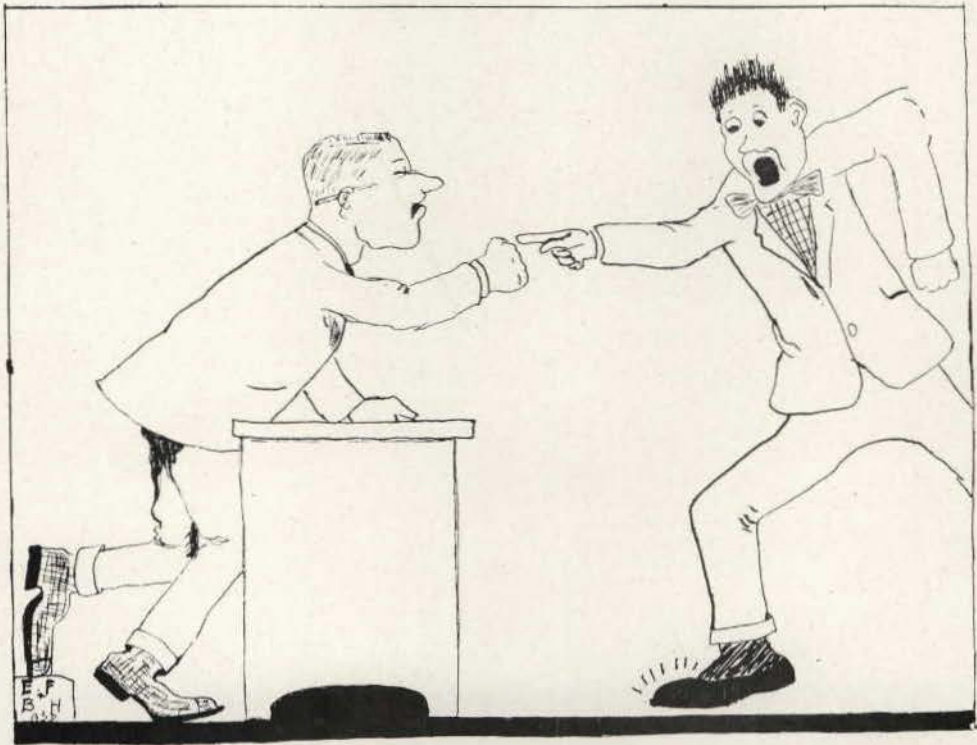

Before all these things are his, however, the Freshman does many things. He helps other Freshmen gather wood for the W. S. C. bonfire, and to him it is not a task—it is an honor. He glories in the under classmen mix which gives him a chance to "get even" with the Sophomores, and he attends the "Bury the Hatchet" dance which comes after the mix, to show that hard feelings are forgotten.

As a mark of respect to his Alma Mater, no Idaho student smokes on her campus, and her president is always saluted.

From the time he is a freshman until he is a Senior, the Idaho student looks forward to the stunt fest and song contest. It is his chance to show the visiting high school athletes some of the frivolity and seriousness of college life. It is his chance to show others what he thinks of them.

In May comes Campus Day, when students and faculty work on the Campus and the May Queen holds her court. Then comes ivy planting and commencement and a college year has gone. Each year, however, makes our Alma Mater and her traditions dearer to us. Her spirit is the unconquerable spirit of the West.

Intercollegiate debating at the University has met with its usual success this year. The International and the Interstate Debating Leagues have brought Idaho in contact with the Universities of Oregon, British Columbia, Montana and Utah. These, together with the duel with Washington State College, have afforded worthy opponents.

The response of the demands of this heavy schedule has been general. Out of the six teams put in the field so far but two competitors have appeared in more than one contest. From this it would seem that interest and effectiveness in debate are not at all localized. The quality of the present freshman class seems especially prophetic of future strength for the University in this department of intercollegiate activity.

The questions discussed have all been timely. Compulsory military training, open versus closed shop, and compulsory arbitration which involves consideration of the wisdom of restricting individual liberty by the extension of social and governmental control. The thorough study of such questions required for an intercollegiate contest cannot fail to give a student a wholesome grasp of the fundamental problems of politics. It is hoped that the extension of this benefit may result from the activities of the open forum.

Music Department

Ever since its incipency the University Department of Music has played an important part in student activities. It has grown steadily each succeeding year in both size and scope. This year the registration was so heavy that the faculty of three were unable to handle all the students without outside assistance. The department has been particularly active this year and promises to be even better next year.

Professor Edwin Orlo Bangs, the head of the department, has shown his ability by producing what was acclaimed as perhaps the best Men's Glee Club ever representing the University. Miss Wegman of the Boston Conservatory of Music has proven her unquestioned accomplishment as a pianist, both by her success and by the work of her pupils.

Mr. John Dickenson, the violinist, has been recognized as one of the best artists in the Northwest. The department looks forward to a larger and better field next year.

Music Club

The organization of the Music Club has met a long felt need on the campus. It has greatly stimulated the interest of the students in the department, and has led to the development of new musical talent. It is the aim of the club to encourage the students in the study and appreciation of classic music. All students in the department and members of the Glee Clubs and orchestra are members. Meetings are held every two weeks, at which short programs are presented, both vocal and instrumental.

The University Glee Club, making its first tour for three seasons, was greeted with unanimous and enthusiastic approbation at every town it visited. During the southern tour eleven towns were visited, and a warm spot for the University of Idaho was left in the hearts of many people. The program at each place was varied and well selected. Too much credit cannot be given to Mr. Bangs or the club for the success of the trip.

The Plodders

Across the desert sands the camels plod
From break of day, their endless way they wend
'Till shades of night, when riders' heads do nod
As drowsiness upon each doth descend ;
Their dreams of shady palms and waters tend
To draw them on, new robes of hope to don,
As thus in life, we struggle to the end
In search of rest and happiness anon,
From dawn of life we strive forever on and on.

—L. F., '21.

The Little Brook

The little brook dances over the stones,
With a thousand tones and undertones,
It stirs the lost sweetness in those grown old,
And whispers to youth of stories untold.

To the disheartened beggar it tells many things
Of palaces, riches, and nobles, and kings,
To the idling dreamer lingering there
It builds wondrous castles all hung in the air.

As he lies on its bank at the end of the day,
The cares of the worker are fast lulled away ;
The feet of the children it guides on in dream,
From freshet to fish thro fairy land green.

In some such a service I'd travel my way
Ever a-singing and making folks gay,
A rest to the weary, dreams to the young,
A song to the songless and speech to the dumb.

The Paloma Bank Robbery Mystery

By Alias Boston Brownie.

"I was in Paloma, an old-time mining town of Western Idaho, in nineteen ten, when the First National Bank was robbed. Old Man Suspician hooked on to a stranger who had been loafing in Kelly's Pool and Billiard Hall for the last two weeks.

"The mere fact that he was a stranger was suspicious to the hard-headed miners of Paloma. And during his stay, he had divulged no information as to his identity, his history, or that most vaunted of things, his home town. This was more evidence that there was something wrong, and the fact that he had left the town suddenly and without warning on the night of the robbery made his guilt conclusive.

"The sheriff had just two facts to work on, the fifty odd thousand dollars of Paloma's hard-earned currency was gone, and so was the pool slicker from Kelly's.

"Sheriff Blodgitt telegraphed to Boise for bloodhounds from the state pen and they were turned loose in the bank. They made an awful racket for a few minutes and then tore up the main street of Paloma and wound up in front of one of the finest homes in the city. Their arrival was simultaneous with the departure of the householder for his place of business. Half an hour later a very trembling and nervous gentleman climbed down from a small fir tree, minus the west end of his trousers and all of his dignity. Mr. Haxley, president of the First National Bank, had spent an altogether unpleasant half hour.

"The hounds were started again. This time they veered off into the forest north of Paloma, and after leading the posse through eight miles of sarvis brush came upon a hole leading under some big boulders, in front of which were some fox tracks and a pile of chicken feathers.

"Five days after the robbery the stranger, alias Lightfingers, alias Penny Turner of Chicago, made his way along the precipitous shore of Lake Onawah, twenty miles from Paloma. A heavy seamless sack was swung over his shoulder. It was evident that the man knew his ground. He went steadily along until he came opposite the drift of the Dazzler, a mine which had been abandoned long before.

"The Dazzler is, perhaps, one of the most curious mines in the world. Its only entrance is on the side of a high granite cliff, four hundred feet above the lake and two hundred feet below the top of the cliff. Just in front of the tunnel was a shelf or bench perhaps twenty feet wide. The tunnel could be gained from the lake shore, but it was a dangerous and trying climb. The entrance was inaccessible from above. A steel cable, the remainder of the old tramway, stretched from the mouth of the tunnel across the lake to the freight road.

"After making a careful survey of the ground, Turner began to climb toward the tunnel. It was a dangerous climb, but he went steadily up, and in less than an hour he had safely made the tunnel.

"About this same time reports began to come into Paloma. The Robinson's, a family of mountaineers, had seen a well dressed man, carrying a sack, making his way toward the lake. This report was confirmed by Murray, a prospector, living near the lake. Two days later a freighter reported having seen smoke at the mouth of the Dazzler.

"Sheriff Daggett immediately reorganized his posse and proceeded to the lake. The hounds picked up a trail along the shore and followed it to the point below the Dazzler, but were unable to climb the face of the cliff, and so contented themselves with mad baying at the hillside.

"Somebody saw a face peering over the edge of the shelf and promptly fired. The face dithdrew from sight and a second later a man was seen to run rapidly along the shelf and enter the mine.

"Blodgitt immediately placed guards up and down the lake shore and sent some to watch above the tunnel. He then went into consultation with his deputies, and it was decided not to attack the tunnel, as the odds were too great against the posse.

"'He can't have much grub up their,' said Blodgitt, 'and if we try to go up the side of the cliff he will pick us all off, dead easy. There ain't no other way out of there, and I figure he'll talk turkey in a day or two, so I am for starving him out.' Most of the members of the posse suddenly remembered their duties to family and town, and the decision was unanimous. I didn't have any family, and Paloma was only about deuce high in my estimation, but for good and sufficient reasons I wasn't anxious to climb the cliff, or to be let down with a rope from above, either.

"'What about that tramway?' somebody asked.

"'Not a chance,' says Jim Donnelly, 'my boys was up there a couple of weeks ago and they said that there wasn't a bucket, pulley or pick handle in the whole mine. She is as empty as a tomb.'

"'No use to watch the other end, then,' said Blodgitt. 'He couldn't walk that half mile of old cable after night, and if he tries it now, we'll make him look like a sieve.'

"As night came on the men built fires below the mine and more on top of the cliff. Guards were scattered wherever there might be a possibility of escape. I would have gambled that a deer mouse could not have gotten by.

"About two o'clock that night it began to rain and in a few minutes it was coming down in sheets. The fires sputtered for awhile and then quit business. It became so dark that you couldn't see ten feet. Blodgitt began to fume and cuss and cranked at everybody and sent for more men. Nothing happened.

"The watch was kept up all day. It was still pouring rain and the men were soaked to the skin. Another night passed and still nothing happened. The third day passed. Blodgitt was as touchy as a boiled owl—the posse was restless and complaining—some of the men had deserted. Blodgitt then decided that men should be lowered from the top of the cliff that night, while others would go up from below, and the two forces would storm the tunnel at daylight. Family calls grew more urgent and so lots were drawn. I was unlucky, as usual.

"The plans were carried out and the next morning we rushed along the shelf and charged the tunnel. No one was hurt, not a shot was fired. The Dazzler was empty, though we searched every drift, shaft and passage way.

"Boldgitt and the deputies said a lot of things that I can't remember.

"Two weeks later I left Paloma and went to Frisco, but before I pulled away I went around to the east side of the lake, where the tramway is anchored, and picked up a forked thorn limb about three inches thick. It had a couple of hand-holts cut in the prongs and the crotch of the stick was nearly burned in two where the cable had run.

"I knew I would find the stick there, for I had lowered it to the shelf in front of the Dazzler nearly a week before the robbery. Turner and I see all the good movies in Frisco now, and own a lot of bonds and war saving stamps, just like you do.

"We are both partial to rainy weather."

A Dream

Last night I had a dream
Of Anglo-Saxon monsters,
Norman Knights,
Shakespearian Ghosts,
And gravediggers.
They were grim, motionless,
Speechless.
One figure in gray
Approached me.
"Oh, eloquent, just, and mighty Death,
You are welcome,
Free me," I cried.
For answer, he turned,
Walked to the door,
Rung the rising bell, and Disappeared.

A. S., '22.

Morning

I hear
A sharp clang as of a bell.
What was that?
A fire? Must I run?
Where?

Oh, yes,
I have it now,
I have just awakened.
It is morning
And that was the rising bell.

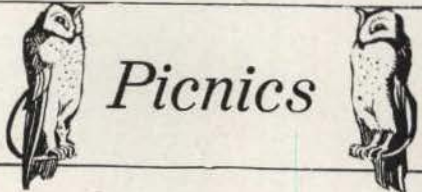

It is cold,
I know it is forty below—
My feet are frozen.
Without a moment's hesitation
I jump up and put on my slippers.

Dazed, I reach my dressing room
And blindly pull my clothes on.
My eye lids droop.
I shiver!
Why could I not have stayed in bed?

Ah, yes,
It is my will power!
How I improve!
It forced me to arise.
Was that it? Let's see.
Of course not,
It was force of habit—
I have an eight o'clock.

Picnics

Why is it that the first symptom of spring fever among college students is always indicated by a sudden outbreak of picnics in their most malign form? What plausible explanation can be given for the fact that we are all so susceptible to this malady? After considering the arguments for and against, we come to the conclusion that it is merely one of the perversities of human nature for which there is no legitimate excuse. For viewing matters in the light of "pure reason" and common sense, picnics are without justification or absolution.

Yet how triumphantly we flaunt an invitation to one of these feasts in the faces of our less fortunate sisters and with what hilarity we begin the formal round of preparation that always marks such an expedition. The first step concerns the resurrection and renovation of our picnic garb. For such occasions every girl has a set and unchangeable type of costume which always includes some form of middy and from which she never varies. She may be the resplendent miss in stiffly starched white or, as in my case, a dilapidated woolen skirt, an antiquated flannel middy and a felt hat may complete a picturesque if not a beautifying costume.

At last the Saturday night preceding the picnic arrives, and we gaily trip on the light fantastic toe until eleven-thirty, little deeming or long, long remembering that tomorrow's revels begin at seven-thirty A. M. On our return from the dance, a search for the alarm clock ensues. After an hour, we find it on S.'s dresser beside her family portrait. Then follows one of the most difficult steps in the whole proceeding, the disposal of the alarm clock. Each of us in turn affirms that the ticking keeps her awake and declares her inability to hear the noisy and belligerent alarm. But finally the clock, set for six-thirty, is forced on the smallest picnicker, and we troop off to bed, to be awakened, not by the alarm, but by the door bell. It is discovered to our chagrin and surprise that our swains have arrived. Wrist watches are hastily consulted, and the hour is seven-thirty A. M. Enmasse we rush for the guardian of the clock to find her peacefully sleeping, having neglected to wind the alarm. We hastily scramble into our clothes and hasten to the front porch, where our hosts are impatiently waiting.

We next proceed to the general assembly ground and behold a hay rack, an auto truck, and two private cars. It would seem that an unkind fate must always mark us for the hay rack victims. Slight wonder they are called racks, for we feel assured they must have been closely related to the Spanish Inquisition. Finally two layers of Jolly Good Fellows are packed in the vehicle and somehow we always seem to be the first layer. After a dusty ride of ten miles we arrive and unload, only to have some enthusiastic fiend lead us two miles up the steepest side of the mountain, through brush, over fallen trees and jagged rocks to the final resting place. Exhausted we fall to the ground and discover that it is—raining. But with undaunted spirits we consume gallons of bitter black coffee, indigestible roast weinies, salad, sandwiches, sour pickles, ice cream and cake. At last, having satisfied ourselves that nothing in the form of food remains, we consider our first duty done and turn to lighter considerations. After supplying the chaperones with a magazine and shelter, the couples take possession of the mountain side, only to return to camp at eventide, soaked, be-draggled, tired, dirty, but happy. We pile into the hay rack, the ice cream freezer resting lightly on our toes, and noting with satisfaction the impaired condition of the miss in white. We arrive home long past the appointed hour, utterly exhausted. Yet we smilingly declare that it has been The One Day in our lives, and it is a ludicrous fact that we mean what we say.

What makes us do it? Why do we endure the agony of early rising and the discomforts of primitive travel for a rainstorm that could be better enjoyed at home? What makes us willing to be torn, scratched, and bruised? Why do we welcome the perils of dust, the practical joker, and spotted fever? Why are we willing to risk snakes, woodticks, and bugs for an indigestible meal on a mountain, when we might be enjoying in substantial and solid comfort a well cooked dinner around our own table? The solution is beyond me, and I can only offer the following in hope that it may bring some light to bear on the subject:

“To one who has been long in city pent
’Tis very sweet to look into the fair
And open face of heaven——”

Coming Home

Coming home early one summer morning from a night spent in the country, the quiet orderliness of the shaded street impressed itself upon me. The houses, which before I had never considered beautiful, seemed now to radiate the very spirit of comfort and hominess. The green vines charitably hid the old glaring ugliness of houses built when gables and carvings were the fashion. The lawns appeared never so neat as then, flecked by the sunlight through the trees into spots of lights and dark green. A child played upon the lawn with a magnificent white collie dog. And to complete the picture my Mother stood smiling, watching for me at the door.

Disillusionment

One day
I bought me a new spring suit,
One of those late models
With lots of class.
It had a split skirt
With a row of buttons.
The kind
You see on all the new creations,
I met
A little boy
Who stared,
And stared,
And then offered to button it for me.
The next time
I get a new spring suit
I'll get one
That doesn't need buttoning.

Forest Moonlight

Deep, stagnant pools of darkness, touched here and there by frail shafts of yellow light.

Rought, gaunt, jagged rocks; silver palisades of fairy's making.

Crystal waterfalls, bedecked with jewels, shimmering sprays, like bursts of laughter.

Dull, droning melodies of unseen winds;

Pale white-faced flowers ghost-like in their splendor;

Soft, silent tread of padded feet; a flickering flash, a firefly.

Pale, cold moonbeams, drifting through the broken arches like shreds of happy dreams.

Low, gurgling melodies of unseen water;

A crack, a rustle, all is still and 'tis nightfall in the forest.

A Shooting on Whitney Bottom

It was late fall. Every morning the sagebrush and willows were covered with a glistening coat of frost. The little eddies along the river and the bayous and swamps were covered with a thin coat of ice. There had been a plentiful fall of rain and the dust which had swept back and forth on the burning summer wind and had hung day after day over the prairie schooner or the solitary horseback rider was firmly settled for the winter.

This night the moon shone brightly from over the Boise mountains. In two hours it would be settling behind their snow-capped peaks. Under its influence the Snake river could be seen shining through the breaks in the hills for several miles up and down the valley. Back from the river ran the bayous, cutting the bottom into several distinct fields and in high water making passage from one bank to another impossible. Wandering about aimlessly in some rude willow and sagebrush corrals were lean steers and horses, the gruesome sear of recent branding plainly visible even in the moonlight. The sagebrush and bunchgrass cast shadows that filled the mind with apprehension which rapidly gave way to fear in the heart of a stranger as a coyote on a distant hill set up a dismal cry, full-throated at first and rising higher and higher until it broke in a melancholy quaver. This would be answered from far and near until the air rang, and one would swear he could make out the forms of the beasts slinking by, and would jump violently when a jackrabbit rushed madly from cover at too close an approach.

Back from the river about two miles and at the mouth of a gulch, where the hills rise rapidly from the bottom, stood a little one-room shack. A light was burning within and cast a bright beam out of the one curtainless window, falling on a well, fitted with bucket and windlass, and several saddles and packs dumped on the ground. A few stunted poplar trees were making a heroic effort at life, though their neglected appearance gave evidence of the spasmodic attention they had received; they told a story of some one's hope to build a home there, and how early that hope had been destroyed.

Inside the house two men were at work, one was shaving, while the other was getting supper. Both were young and dressed in overalls and flannel shirts and high-heeled cowboy boots.

There was silence for several minutes, then the man at the stove drawled: "Pard, we've made a good haul. We can take our stuff in tomorrow night and sell it and then clear out. I reckon we've played our hand here about as long as we can."

"Yes," replied the other, "we can't leave too quick for me. If it wasn't for your damn stubbornness we'd be out of here tonight; no reason, either, except your wanting to get in a couple of more steers; a steer more or less ain't goin' to make any difference with us, and my bones crave a change."

The man at the stove thoughtfully turned the bacon over and over for a few minutes, then suddenly turned square on his companion and said: "Pard, what's on your mind? You've been a changed man the last few months. What the deuce has happened? You know how you surprised me when you started in this cattle-lifting business. You had better tell me the whole thing, for you will be a crazy man before long if you keep on broodin' and thinkin' to yourself so."

The other slowly wiped his razor, put it in its case and sat down. "Bill," he said, "I'll tell you, it won't take long. When I left Minnesota two years ago I was engaged to be married. I came out here to make a stake, as I didn't have much cash. Well," he paused and lit his pipe, "everything went all right till last spring, my hopes was high and things seemed to be comin' my way. I got this shack built, the well dug and the trees planted, and had some of my irrigation ditches dug. Well, as I said before, every thing went fine till last spring, when one day I got a letter from her saying she had married another man." He paused again and pulled hard on his pipe for several minutes, then he continued: "I made a vow then that if I ever saw her again I would kill her. Well, time went on, I got into this cattle business to have something to do; there wasn't any call for me to work this ranch any longer. Then along about a month ago I got another letter from her saying that the fellow she had married had left her. She wanted me to forgive her and said she was coming out to find me." He sprang to his feet and reached for his gun. "My God!" he cried, "if she comes here I pity her, for I'll kill her sure as hell." He stood for several minutes, his face working and his hand fingering the trigger of his gun.

His companion rose to his feet and in as calm a voice as he could muster said: "Oh, put up your gun, old fellow, the girl isn't within a thousand miles from here." Just as he spoke there was a soft tap on the door, it was pushed open and the lamp light fell on the weary, tired face of a young woman. Suddenly her eyes came to rest on the man standing by the wash bench and the weary look changed to one of joy. She started forward, but only one step was taken before the expression of joy changed to one of terror. She uttered a short exclamation and turning, started to run. A shot rang out, followed by a piercing scream. The girl ran, still screaming, up the gulch, the man following her. A few minutes later, far up the gulch, another shot rang out, and all was still except for the lonesome wail of a coyote far up the river. The moon, near the horizon, cast a few long shadows beyond the windlass and the little trees, then sank behind the mountains, plunging everything in darkness.

* * * *

This all happened a long time ago. The little trees have grown to giant poplars, the shack has gone to ruin and only a few boards remain; the sagebrush has been largely cleared away, and it is only occasionally that the once familiar cry of a coyote is heard. But one thing remains unchanged—just as the moon sets behind the mountain a shot rings out from among the poplars and is followed by a piercing scream, and a white figure runs up the gulch followed by a man with a gun. A few minutes later another shot rings out, then all is still. The moon casts long shadows beyond the poplars far toward the river, and then sinks behind the mountains.

Fudge

The story of the college girl who, when she is first married knows how to make nothing edible except fudge and salad dressing, is one of the standard subjects of humor. If, however, the makers of American humor did but realize the importance of fudge in college life they would never again touch upon the subject of fudge making with levity. On the other hand, if the faculty but realized the importance of fudge and fudge making a course in it would be substituted for chemistry in the Home Economics Department. A girl's reputation is made or lost on her abilities as a fudge maker. If a boy desires a large place in a girl's heart all he has to do to gain it is to praise her fudge and she is his for life. If he doesn't care for fudge he must acquire a taste for it; if that is impossible, let him see the Dean of the Faculty and change his schedule.

The Old Road

Did you ever wander down an old country road just at twilight? There is an atmosphere of happiness and peace in the country—the whole world seems open to you—to remember or forget. In the distance you can see an old farm house almost hidden in the thick trees; there is a bright light in the window and a blue curl of smoke softly stealing from the high red chimney. You can almost see the dear mother, in the kitchen, preparing the evening meal for her loved ones. It is just light enough to distinguish the large, grassy lawn, in front of the house, sprinkled with flower beds and bushes. A shepherd dog is anxiously waiting at the gate for his master. Yes, it is a perfect home; you want to walk up to the door and enter, but a turn in the road ends your happy dream and you follow the old road with only memories.

The Gem of the Mountains

The Gem of the Mountains, published annually by the Junior Class, is now regarded as a permanent Idaho institution and adds the final touch of the college year. The book portrays, both in pictures and print, the chief events of the college year, and records all leading activities. It supplies for the student a permanent memory of his college days and is an invaluable keepsake in later life.

The staff is elected by the class, and is directly responsible for the editing of and the sale of the book. The first edition of the "Gem of the Mountains" was published in 1903, and since that time a volume has been published each year.

The University Argonaut

The University Argonaut is the official publication of the student body. The editor and business manager are elected by the student body and have full control.

Last fall the paper started the year with a staff that as a whole was almost entirely ignorant of the newspaper game. An efficient staff was soon developed through the news writing class, however, and the paper soon took on a professional air.

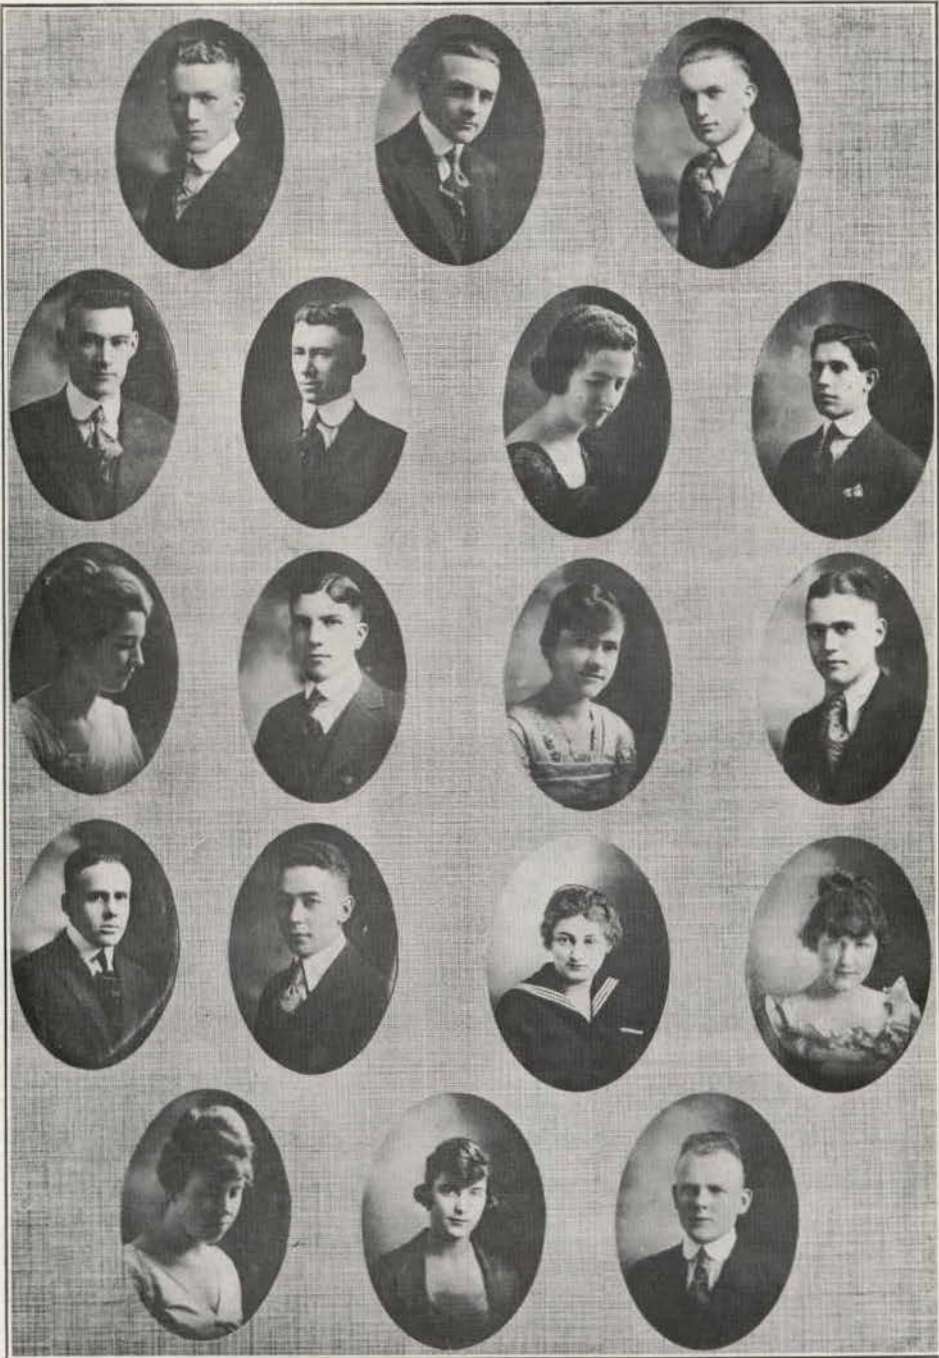

This year the constitution of the A. S. U. I. has been amended so that the editor of the Argonaut holds office for only one semester, after which the associate editor automatically takes his place. It is hoped that this will in the future forestall any occurrence of the editor being elected by a political machine without any thought of his ability as a newspaper man, as may have been the case in past years.

Another innovation that has been started this year is the plan of sending the Argonaut to all the alumni. When the mailing list is completed it is expected that the numbers will be up in the thousands.

The sentiment has been often expressed that much credit is due Editor Langroise and Business Manager McDevitt for the success of the paper this year.

ORGANIZATIONS

The Executive Board

The Executive Board was organized simultaneously with the founding of the A. S. U. I. It is composed of representatives from the various activities—the student body officers and a faculty member. This board has charge of all the disbursements of students' funds, resulting from the registration fee, transacts all general student body business, and acts as a court of arbitration of disputes.

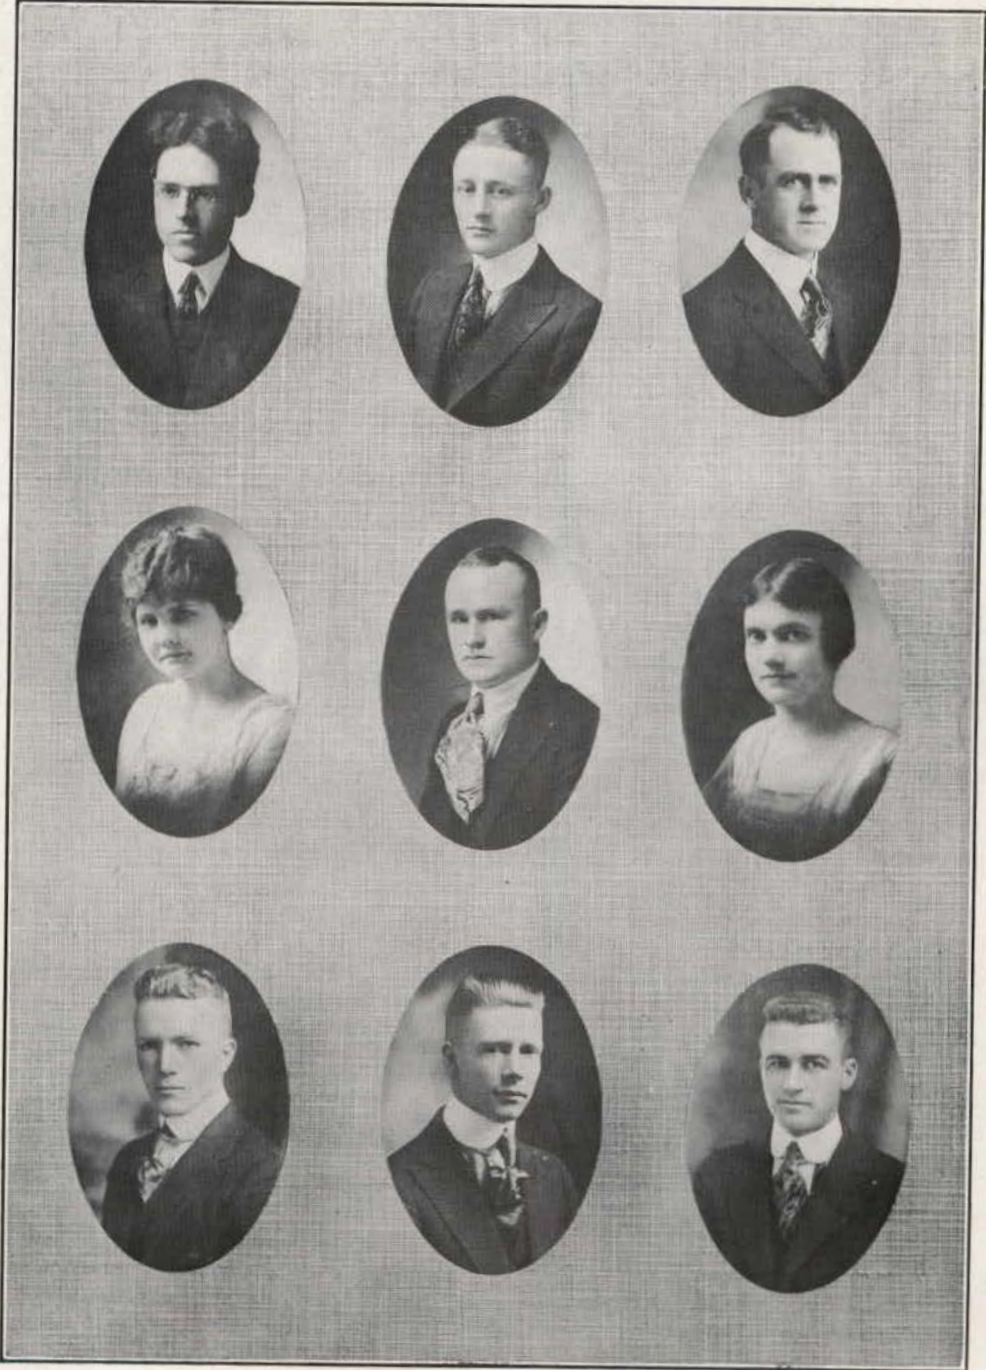

The A. S. U. I. includes all students in the University, a membership fee of five dollars being collected each semester, upon registration. The fee entitles the student to a pass to all activities financed by the A. S. U. I., a subscription to the "Argonaut," the University student publication, and allows the privilege of voting. The general election of officers is held in May of each year.

The Veterans' Vocational Club is an organization composed of ex-service men who were disabled in the recent war on account of wounds, sickness or injury, and who are now in training under the supervision of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. These men are in the University for the express purpose of vocational rehabilitation, being disabled to such an extent that they are unable to pursue their former occupations.

A permanent organization was established in January of this year, and in February a club house was secured and officers elected for the ensuing semester. Dean F. G. Miller, of the School of Forestry, was elected faculty advisor.

The enrollment of the Club will be larger with the beginning of the coming year, as a number of men have not yet been placed in training. This addition to the membership of the club will assure a strong organization in the future.

The English Club

This year of 1920 is the 14th year that a group of students interested in literature and dramatics has been numbered among the organizations in the University of Idaho.

In 1913 a reorganization of the original informal group was effected under the encouragement of Dr. Moore, Miss Brashear and Mr. Lehman. The chief aim, however, continued to be "to stimulate interest in good drama, to create a theatre in which to present examples of the best English plays, and to uphold the high standards of this form of entertainment and instruction."

In 1917-18, with the introduction of Mr. G. M. Miller as head of the Department of English, the purposes and membership of the club were greatly broadened. Under the new constitution all phases of student interest which might look to the department for encouragement were co-ordinated for mutual help. The membership is honorary, extended as a reward for special ability in English work, or for service compatible with its line of interest. Major students and instructors in the department, the debating teams, the editorial staff of the Argonaut, and the "Gem of the Mountains", members of the casts, and the producing staffs are entitled to enjoy its privileges.

In its practical aspects the three standing committees typify the activities of the Club. The Dramatic Committee yearly selects and produces plays, drawing the personnel from the club and the student body.

The monthly meetings are in the hands of the program committee. It is their endeavor not to make the meeting "highbrow" or merely informative. They try to add to the enjoyment of the members in various extra classroom phases of writing, of speaking, of dramatics and of literature.

The Original Composition Committee encourages the exercise of originality outside of the classroom in the direction of the individual interest.

The success of the club in the winter of 1919-20 and the enthusiasm of its members promises for the club a permanent and enlarging place among the student activities of the University.

The Associated Miners

Affiliated Junior Society of The American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers.

The Associated Miners or "Muckers Club" is one of the oldest organizations in the University.

The club meets twice a month for business, professional and social purposes. Papers are presented by the students, faculty and visiting engineers.

The Ag Club

The Ag Club is one of the oldest organizations in the University. Its membership includes all students regularly enrolled in the College of Agriculture. Its purpose is to effect a unity of action among the students of the College of Agriculture and to preserve and enrich the traditions of the college, to promote good fellowship among its members, and to control all matters of special interest to the Ag students.

The association has had charge of the "Ag Bawl" and the "Ag Judging Day." Through the Association, prominent agriculturists are brought to the college to speak before its meetings. In this way the members are kept in close touch with new developments in agriculture.

Bench and Bar Association

The Bench and Bar Association was organized in 1912. Its membership includes all of the students regularly enrolled in the College of Law. The purpose of the association is to effect a unity of action among the students and faculty and to preserve and enrich the traditions of the law school. The association has established and has maintained the "Honor System" in the law school for several years; is responsible for the "Lawyer's Court" and other things of benefit to those studying law. It is thru the association that prominent lawyers, judges, and men of note in law are brought to the school to speak before its meetings and in this way the law school is kept in touch with new developments of the law in the courts of this state and of the neighboring states.

The Associated Barbs

The Associated Barbs were organized in the fall of 1916 to unite the non-fraternity men in a greater bond of fellowship and to keep them in closer touch with university life.

The association has for its aims a bigger, better Idaho, to help promote a better spirit between fraternity and non-fraternity men, and lastly, but not least, to lend substantial aid in the movement to provide a men's dormitory.

Foreword

These are times of great stress and change, wherein the lowly are constantly seeking to overcome the mighty, and the mighty are striving to instruct the lowly in the way that they should go. Therefore we have Rules for Women, also votes, a faculty, and A. J. Priest. The result of this vast conflict of forces is a general razing of all social and scholaristic barriers. Thus we find confirmed D. G. fussers accepting Gamma Phi dinner bids, and see the decline of the grand old tradition that made it an honor to flunk in Chem. Humanitarianism manifests itself on every side.

Having taken these weighty matters into consideration the "Contra-Fraternity Society of the University of Idaho" has taken it upon itself to revolutionize the modern Greek college society by setting new standards for the prospective students of their school, and by revealing the darker of the secrets of their various orders.

The various groups will continue to exist as non-secret organizations. The disposal of the secrets will eliminate any further need of chaperones at fraternity dinners, and chapter rooms. All chapter meetings will be conducted around the "I" bench. All pledging and initiatory services will be conducted in the University auditorium.

In collaboration with Prof. Reed, a series of psychological tests have been prepared, the satisfactory passing of which will be taken as evidence of the student's ability to take his place in campus life, without reference to his high school work. The first of these tests, to be taken by all students, follows:

Answer all questions in five words, more or less.

1. Who runs the University?
2. Does anybody know?
3. What is a rushee, a co-ed, a pre-med? (See Campus Dictionary.)
4. Are you intelligent?
5. What makes you think so?
6. After leaving college, do you intend to take husband or a wife?
7. If so, whose?
8. Can you shimie?
9. Where? (Answer what place, not what part of the body.)
10. What is a date?
11. Do you consider fresh or stuffed ones better for college dinners?
12. Do you like dances? Why?
13. If you are a boy, did you ever attend a masquerade dressed as a girl?
14. What other tight places have you been in?
15. If Fleeta should get lost, would Ken Hunter?
16. If not, why not?

A grade of 40 per cent is considered passing.

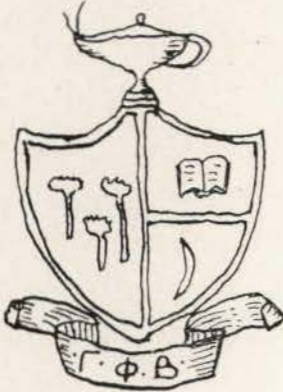

After this primary test has been passed, the prospects will be divided into groups according to the nature of their answers, and will then be submitted to tests of a more personal nature.

All who so desire will be asked to make a choice of Greek letter society. For their guidance, the following explanation of the crests of the various organizations is offered.

GAMMA PHI BETA

The gravy boat at the top of the crest announces to the world that the Gamma Phi cook is the best ever. The open book is a copy of "Snappy Stories," from which the organization has taken the wording for most of its ceremonies. On the left are shown the three feather dusters, one for each floor, which every freshman must learn to inhale soup with before she can be initiated. The embryo moon is put into the lower right hand corner to show that the sisters really have a subject for their favorite song.

SIGMA NU

At the top of this crest of Sigma Nu we see a bright star shining out from a cabbage-like structure. This indicates that the brightest of the Sigma Nus shine in the agricultural lines. In the shield proper, on the upper right corner, one may find a sprocket wheel. This signifies that some of the brothers are also interested in the more aesthetic things, such as mechanics. The crossed riding whips fall in nicely with the agricultural idea and we find the brothers skinning mules vigorously on the pavement in front of the fraternal domicile. The white thing in the lower left is a snake, which is ever the characteristic figure in a Sigma Nu nightmare.

BETA THETA PI

The dragon at the top of the crest above indicates that this particular society is of Chinese origin. The colored shield reminds one that there are two classes in the society; those who fuss D. G., and those who don't. The service chevron bearing the three stars has a double meaning. The chevron itself is reminiscent of the fact that several of the brothers have, at various times, served terms in various city coolers. The three stars on the chevron remind the initiated that the founder of the fraternity was "Three Star Hennessy."

KAPPA ALPHA THETA

This organization is a newly instituted branch of the Odd Fellows, as is indicated by the three links. Their kite is generally flying high, clear up by the eagle head, in fact. Both the kite and the eagle are significant of soaring, the head, therefore, being a sorehead. This gives rise to the selection of the initial letters of the name to form KAT. The scroll with the star in the center is significant of the fact that sisters shall at all times seek to make literature their shining light.

PHI DELTA THETA

The armor and implements of warfare which are so conspicuous on this crest are significant of the constant duels that are being fought between this order and the Kappas. The stars have a double significance. They represent the most common scenery of the Phi Delt warriors during the battles with the Kappas. Also, the order is of a rather religious nature, and the six stars represent what they expect their crowns to be set with when they are called beyond. Inside the chapter the members of this order refer to each other as Knights of the round table, which means that every other meeting is given over to poker.

ALPHA KAPPA EPSILON

No, you guessed wrong. The cognomen that you see plastered on the little black diamond isn't a nickname thrown at them in derision. It is their real set of initials. The scroll that holds them signifies that scholarship is their strong fort. Thus they are good friends of Dr. Miller, and are petitioning Phi Gamma Delta. The color black denotes the delectable forbidden fruits of pool and Masterpiece, which the fraternal doctrine decrees that they shall not touch. The points on the ends of the diamond show that the sides come together there.

KAPPA SIGMA

The little spherical object at the top of this crest is suggestive of a pawn-broker's sign, which is to remind the brothers that if they wish to go to the Gamma Phi formal they must keep tight hold of the little yellow ticket. The five stars are in commemoration of the five brothers who passed out while trying nobly to put 25 hours into June 30, 1919. The moon stands for the favorite Kappa Sigma pastimes, which are honey moon and moon shine. The mosquito on top of the pawn ball indicates that the brothers often get stung.

DELTA GAMMA

Is an oriental organization. In the crest we find the sands of the desert, three stars of the east, and a pyramid. The chapter song is, "Until the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold." The funny thing at the top of the crest is supposed to be a palm. It is a date palm. The large character in the center stands for gettem. They do, and as a result have the choicest collection of fraternity pins on the campus. "Tau Delta Eta," the motto on the scroll, is very similar to "Phi Delta Theta," which explains the closeness of the two houses.

SIGMA ALPHA EPSILON

The principal feature of this organization, as noted on the crest, is that, for the members, the sun rises and sets in the fraternity. The raindrop effect, in the upper right hand corner, indicates that there shall be showers of blessings for every S. A. E. Not satisfied with double crossing an enemy, they do not stop until they have triple crossed him, as is shown by the three crosses in the upper left. The bird on the lower left illustrates a man before taking, and that on the right illustrates the same man after taking the S. A. E. initiation.

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA

Is recommended to those who are fond of keeping late hours. The key is symbolical of the constant unlocked condition of the Kappa front door. It seems that the key has been removed from the door and put in the crest. The owl intensifies the late idea, and also stands for the wisdom of the course, which is stated in the motto, which is "Kappas Kan Gettem."

A silhouette of the first cook of the order appears above, with her monogram still higher in the crest. She was colored, and characterized again by the blackbirds in the center of the crest, meaning that she was some bird.

Copyrighted 1908 by G. M. Miller

We were taking the notes,
Getting down and guessing what he said.
And it might have been dramatics,
And it might have been themes,
And it might have been what we hadn't read.
Now the lecturer had a tablet
And the tablet it was now.
Frosh listen to my song.
And the buying of the tablet was the proper thing to do;
And don't keep waiting very long.

One day we received orders to write a theme,
The Prof's, were raving and on the fret,
But Miller knew his duty and he also knew his bean
And forced us to buy his patent tablet.
As we got out our pens, started to spill the ink,
Our imaginations were working all the while,
But we darsn't charge it and we darsn't write a check,
So we had to use paper of a different style.
So the chief posted a notice, a notice to this effect,
You'll have to use the tablet that I made
And the one that doesn't last very long.

So when the term was over, and for the exams we crammed,
And things were coming on the jump,
We forgot to use his paper, and every Freshman flunked;
But the bloody bloomin' theme tablet is
Still at the Stand.

Farewell

We've gone! On you 'tis April fool.
You'll be surprised we're not in school.
You didn't know our secret dark
That we were planning for this lark.

Our Menu for today we'll leave
You may take charge—we will not grieve
Cook up everything just right,
As we'll be hungry again tonight.

For breakfast there is shredded wheat,
Served with sugar and cream so sweet.
To count the cost could be no-end
As 'twas left here by an unknown friend.

With graham muffins and marmalade
And cocoa which is not yet made.
If this is not enough to satisfy
Open the cooler and fill your eye.

For lunch we have some Irish stew
Direct from Ireland straight to you.
The rest of the menu is not planned,
But you'll find it in the cellar—canned.

Spaghetti and tomatoes for dinner at six,
If the cook is not here—'tis easy to mix.
Corn bread is on the menu here,
You'll have to make that too, I fear.

Jelly sweet from the cellar below,
And pear salad fixed just so,
If some tea you'd like to brew
There is some in the cupboard for you.

We elect you as maid and cook.
Be sure and keep your time in a book.
The dishwashers' job we give to you,
So don't stop working before you're thru.

Count the calories, count the cost,
Weigh everything that may be lost.
Report to us as a manager should,
Then we'll know you've done what you could.

"Spring Has Come"

And with knowing promptness the Council has decreed various regulations calculated to guide the wandering footsteps of youth thru the dangerous season. And, as ever, the silvery utterance of the magic name has inspired poets and editors of the "Argonaut" to indite sibylline sonnets and liting lyrics about sundry phases of its advent; therefore this:

The modern grecian bard is usually so impressed and thrilled by the extension of fussing hours, the greening of the grass beneath the trees, and the substitution of fresh lettuce and spinach for canned corn and sauer kraut on the fraternal board, that his eyes are blind to the multifarious other aspects of the change in nature. Listen to a truth, gentle reader. Should one be cast into the midst of a great roaring, bare city, as cold to nature as the reply that one gets when, after being turned down by a co-ed in a certain house for a date for a certain time, he calls on a second co-ed in the same house for the same date, and should one be unable to see the waxing sun and feel the prickle of his winter flannels, and be only conscious of the crude, artificial creations of man, the coming of spring would be none the less evident.

The spring sun seems to illuminate, as no other light will, the worn places and spots on one's winter clothing. As long as the snow falls, and the ground remains hard beneath the foot, the winter garments retain their dressy appearance and charm. But let a robin flit by the window, and a warming sun create a filf of mud over the frozen earth, and our apparel at once becomes impossible and dilapidated. The clothiers are aware of this phenomena, and, weeks before the last wintry flake hs fallen, fill their windows with garments calculated to attract the eye of spring struck youth. And then, although the ground may yet be bare and brown, and Professor Young may yet be using preserved specimens in botany laboratory, one may say with assurance that spring is about ready to be here, because Cal Smith says so.

To the merchants we are still more indebted for an artificial aspect of the arrival of the gladsome season. The confectioners, doubtless because the majority of them have been youthful at one time themselves, realize the profound truth that rests in the hackneyed adage about the waywardness of a young man's thoughts in the spring. Accordingly, he fills his windows with delicious candies in most elaborate containers, accompanied by neat, hand printed cards bearing such suggestive announcements as, "Try our five-pound special. She will like you better for it. Only $6.25."

The ancient dreamer who evolved the axiom that fills the candymaker's window needed no very long or tedious study to prove the truth of his assertion. It has been said that youth was the same yesterday as it is today. And today we college folk are deriving much joy from the exciting game of trying to count the campus engagements as fast as they are announced. The genial spring sun seems to melt the bonds that tie the college Greek to his fraternal emblem. It soon becomes rather the rule to see a sword-pierced shield, or a diamond, or a star and crescent adorning the dainty georgettes of the fair co-eds.

But, enough, enough!" cries the reader. Right thou art, gentle one. Thou speakest a whole mouthful in few sounds. Turn on to less subtle things.

"Say it with Flowers"

It's the Remembering that means so much. Those friendships you prize so highly—those courtesies you ought to acknowledge—those favors you intend to repay—all can be remembered more graciously and thought fully by the simple, timely gift of flowers.

It's the tender thought—the sincere message—that makes flowers so appropriate. For "the gift without the giver is bare." But your gift of flowers is—you!

"There's a spot in my heart that no Coleen can own,"

Sang Oliver Oswald O'Borrow;

"That's the five-spot I handed to you as a loan,"

Said his friend, "I must have it tomorrow."

Brewster—"You don't think my job a real one? Why, I'm a traveling salesman. I use brains—not muscle."

Clements—"Well, I must say you're the first traveling salesman I have ever seen that doesn't carry a sample with him."

Cushman—"Where did the poet get his inspiration for 'Sweet and Low?'"

Gill—"Must have been in a ball room."

IN THE CLASS.

In answer to a question by Evans in the class on Trusts, Mac responded, reading from text:

"These funds are bona vacantia."

"And just what does that mean."

"I do not know."

"Correct."
