Dear Vandal Fans,

The week of Homecoming '98 sizzled with excitement as the rivalry for first place in the homecoming competition generated a spectacular battle of creativeness. For the past six years, Alpha Kappa Lambda has captured the winning title, leaving the residence halls short of winnings. This year, however, the usual stiff-butfriendly competition between the Greek system and the residence halls, for the victory of Homecoming, captured the attention of the entire student body. For, this time, the residence halls were running away with most of the points and leaving the Greeks lagging behind in the dust.

The Residence Halls gave the fraternities and sororities a real run for their money. Graham and French Halls collaborated efforts in the festivities, and wound up in the spotlight for several of the week's competitions. Their effort and determination to finally defeat the Greeks ended up earning them a front-page picture in the local newspaper, and the respect of University students alike.

On Tuesday of Homecoming Week, the annual Vandal Jingles contest was held in the SUB Ballroom. With each group performing inventive and entertaining jingles of it's own, the ballroom seemed to come alive with thunderous applause. Swing dancing was a popular theme this year, and many students were clad in khakis and white oxford shirts for their skits (attire that was inspired by the GAP Jeans commercials that had recently dominated TV screens).

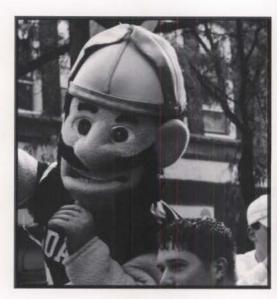

Friday evening, students gathered at Guy Wick's Field to warm themselves in front of a roaring bonfire, complete with the flaming (sacrificial) ISU Bengal that was perched at the top. The spectators enjoyed the heat while the finalists in the Vandal Jingles competition treated them to one last performance of their hilarious skits. To top off the evening, the crowd enthusiastically cheered on the Vandal Gold Dancers, who were accompanied by the exhilarating music of the University's marching band.

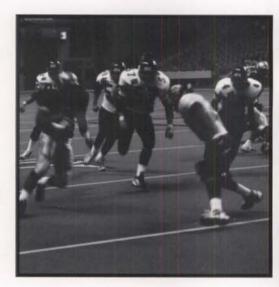

Early the next morning, throngs of spectators assembled in the streets of Moscow to observe the annual Homecoming parade. The Vandal Marching band, along with several local high school and junior high marching bands (ranging from the Pullman to Coeur d'Alene areas) kept the crowds moving. The cluster of onlookers was delighted to see the many creative floats designed by the students. The crowd showed particular enthusiasm as Graham and French halls paraded through the streets dressed as a Chinese Dragon. the crowd also loved Tau Kappa Epsilon's replica of the Administration Building's clock tower and imitations of the gargoyles that adorn Memorial Gym.

On Saturday, the result of homecoming week's contest were finally announced, at half-time of the Homecoming game against ISU. Members of the Greek houses were jubilant to learn that, once again, they had defeated the resident halls in the battle for homecoming greatness. The final winners of the competition were Delta Gamma Sorority and Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity. Thanks for the wonderful week!

Hemp Fest

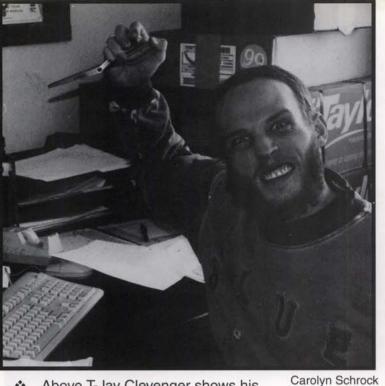

Last year rather than the annual Hemp Festival, Moscow residents hosted an Earth Day. Some say that it was due to complaints that supporting Hemp was supporting Marijuana, others simply said that there was no one willing to organize it. The Hemp Fest was brought back in full force this year by local college students Gina Williams and Alison Eaquinto. The festival supported the industrial use of Hemp for paper, clothing and many other products. On April 24th people of all kinds flocked to East City Park to listen to band after band display their talents. In addition, several vendors were brought in from around the Northwest to sell items made from Hemp. Locals set up food vendors and lemonade stands to quell the appetites of festival goers. The weather turned out to be an unexpectedly beautiful day with temperatures reaching into the 70s. All in all, the festival was a hit. Attendance was high and people danced and soaked up sunshine till the sun went down. At the end of the evening a drum circle was held. The only thing that Williams felt was missing was an informational speaker to remind people that the festival was not about legalizing marijuana. Maybe next year, girls. It is all part of living in a college town. With over twelve thousand students living in close quarters, certain violations of the law are inevitably going to happen. The most common complaint to the campus police being that of noise. At one point over eight noise complaints were filed in a night. Other bizarre complaints find their way into the crime log on a regular basis. During Homecoming kegs were reported stolen and fake identification cards taken. Later in the month Halloween brought out the "pumpkin thieves." However silly, the crime still carries a punishment, which explains the abundance of police enforcement in Moscow. Alumni. The word rolls off my tongue with a foreign yet pleasing feel. I am going to be an Alumn. Wow. Senioritis has a simple little cure, it comes in the neat little package of diploma, and by golly, I'm gonna get one!!!

I was so sick and tired of this place. My feet and brain were getting restless for something new, somewhere new. Yet, the real world is like a gigantic pond filled with sharks all waiting to see me emerge newborn into the workforce. Many decisions need to be made and if you are a well-developed procrastinator like me, you are in for a big shock. It seems like your whole life is on a due date (more than usual). It is even worse if you are continuing on to Grad School. Its almost like you back to being a little High School graduate and are looking for a college to attend. Tests, paperwork, visits, and decisions.

But taking a deep breath and sitting on the Administration lawn, I almost feel sad. All the familiar sights; Memorial Gym, the Library and even the I-Tower. I am going to miss being nearly decapitated by Frisbee golfers, and watching packs of tongue lolling dogs galloping by. I am going to miss the beautiful autumn in Moscow with the trees every color of the rainbow. I am going to miss arguing with professors and scrambling to the library to finish that paper two minutes before it is due. I am going to miss you U of I.

February 23, 1999 6:00A.M. While most of the University of Idaho campus is still sleeping, a number of students are gathering in the SUB Ballroom. Their mission: to receive their volunteers assignments. Who are these sleepdeprived souls? the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival Volunteers. They do everything from running the competition sights to picking up performers at the Spokane Airport. They set and strike stages, lead visiting groups around campus and assist the judges, all without getting paid. The bonus is free tickets to some of the greatest Jazz in the United States.

This year the Jazz Greats included Brian Bomberg, Wally "Gator" Watson, Billy Contreras, "The Ray Brown Trio", Diana Krall, and of course Lionel Hampton. They all traveled to Idaho to perform in the Greatest Jazz Festival in the world. The Greats shared the stage with the winning students from each division as they packed the Kibbie Dome for the 32nd U of I Jazz Festival. Story By Barbara Cooper Layout By Stacy Carroll

It has been said a hundred times, "there is nothing to do in Moscow if your not twenty-one." On the contrary- there are a number of things to do in town.

The University provided for several forms of entertainment. There were any number of sporting events if that was your thing. The theater department performed and brought in shows of all kinds for students to watch. The Southside Coffee House hosted open mic nights for those who wished to share their writings.

ASUI productions brought bands of all kinds to town. This year the students were treated to the likes of Everclear, The Big Bad Voodoo Daddies, Modest Mouse and The String Cheese Incident.

The community does its part as well. Restaurants such as Laura's Tea and Treasure hosted poetry readings, small concerts and dramatic performances. These events were fun and affordable. Other activities took place at The Beach and The Moscow Social Club such as Drag shows and Swing Dances. These were events for those who enjoyed wild dressers or a bit of nostalgia. In addition to these, there were an over abundance of restaurants and movie theaters.

Whatever your interests, Moscow provided students with fun for any evening. Next year watch for flyers to be posted on the wall and indulge, there is something for everyone.

Whether for better or worse it was a year of change for Moscow. While the town lost several businesses it gained some as well.

At the beginning of the year Moscow lost the Micro Movie House. The theater was known for its support of independent films. In recent years the owner was not making enough profit to stay open. Many people saw it as a repercussion of the Eastside Cinemas opening. The Kenworthy Theater downtown also closed its doors this year.

A favorite local coffee house, The Vox also had to close its doors due to lack of profit. In its place Moscow was given Moscow lost the Kenworthy theater, but gained the new Eastside Cinemas Papa John's Pizza. The Red Door, a rather fancy restaurant on North Main, was also added to the list of Moscow restaurants.

Not all businesses were lost to lack of profit, though. The Capricorn, a favorite bar for students, burnt down in September under mysterious circumstances. Unfortunately, the owners decided against rebuilding.

Closer to home for students was the construction of a new student commonssmack dab in the middle of campus. At all times the hum of power tools and fork lifts shook the UCC while dump trucks made their way through campus. Definitely a year of vast change in Moscow. Story and Layout by Stacy Carroll

You've waited your entire life for it. You started out with mom and dad. Then you graduated to a dorm room or perhaps shared a sleeping porch in the Greek System. At any rate, it wasn't your own. You've shared bathroom and kitchens, living rooms and television sets. You have had it with communal living.

When asked what they missed about living on campus, most students had to search for an answer. But one answer was inevitable, the University right out your front door. Student walk in from all ends of Moscow after they move off campus. It makes typing papers and meeting for study groups on campus a challenge.

When asked what they liked about living off campus there were a variety of answers. Personal space was a big one. The ability to step outside and enjoy peace and quiet. Many answers pertained to food issues. While most students can't afford big meals, cooking for oneself was a popular alternative to the cafeteria style. Potlucks have become a common festivity for students living off campus. This way students can share an array of food instead of cooking for just one or two. Other answers were the ability to have pets. Whatever the reason living off campus has become more and more popular every year, which explains the difficulty in parking on campus.

he year in Review

With the end of the year coming, it is inevitable to look back at what events and issues stick in the mind. Society and Governmental issues hit the University of Idaho campus directly.

With the beginning of school the most talked of issue was that of President Clinton's "sexual relations" with Monica Lewinsky. The country was full of opinions of the situation. Some believed that given the fact that the President had lied under oath to the Supreme court he should be impeached. While others found the cost and media coverage were over blown. The Impeachment process proceeded and finally ended with Clinton still in the White House. One can be sure that after such a publicized scandal he will not stay there long.

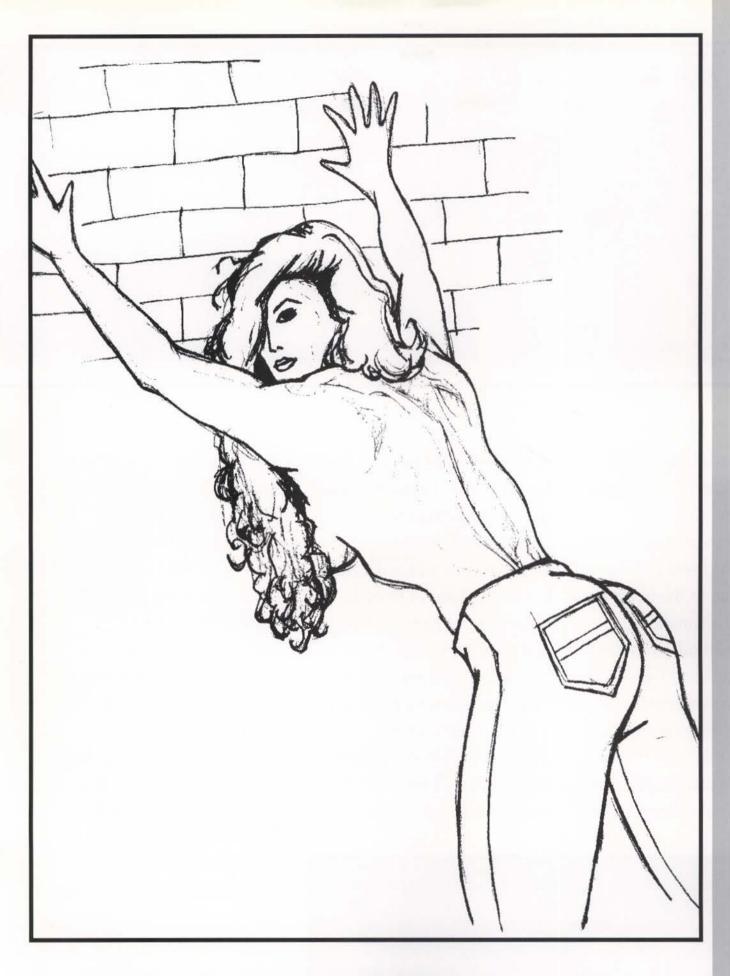

As soon as that cleared up, NATO began Air Strikes on the Yugoslav army, trying to defuse the conflict between Serbs and Albanians in Kosovo. Several professors lead a lecture in the Law Building to discuss with the students the issues involved. Many people felt that it was necessary to help the Kosovars who were being forced out of their country, while still others saw it as a potential Vietnam reenactment.

Closer to the home of college students is the appearance of Homosexual hate crimes. In the first semester of school the nation was stunned by the murder of University of Wyoming student Matthew Shepard. Shepard made the simple mistake of befriending two men in a Laramie, Wyoming bar. He confided to the two that he was a homosexual. The student was then taken out a dirt road and brutally beaten and hung on a fence post for the evening, not to be discovered until the next morning. Shepard died shortly after in a hospital. Both men were prosecuted, as of April 10th one had admitted to the horrific crime to avoid the death penalty.

On a lighter note though, it is obvious that our generation is on the road to acceptance of Homosexuality. Events such as "Angels in America" being produced on campus is a good sign. The play is centered around America in the '80s, (keep in mind most of us are children of the '80s). It covers all issues that reign prevalent in our lives. homosexuality is a big one, as well as religion and politics of the decade, AIDS and even addiction. An added bonus was the visit of the playwright Tony Kushner, who spent several days at the University of Idaho lecturing to students.

Moscow made a little news of its own with the challenge of a nudity ordinance. Challenged by two women refused to put their top on in July. continued...

Artist Nick Hopkins decorated the front page of the Argonaut with various drawings such as this controversial one that depicts the issue of a topless woman in downtown Moscow. Many female students on campus found it distasteful, to put it mildly, while others found the artist's renditions to be entertaining.

The issue went up against the city council. The council expected to pass an ordinance requiring women to cover the areola of the breast. Due to the absence of one of the ordinance's supporters it failed to pass. So tops optional, I guess.

Our own Argonaut pushed the envelope on several occasions this year. One of the biggest attention getters was a full color beer banner across the front page as the University of Idaho prepared to challenge rival school Boise State University. Many students and administrators found the banner to be in poor taste. Argonaut Editor and staff commented that it was an issue of the student's First Amendment Rights and a ploy to get readers' attention. They continued to spark further controversy with issues such as The Chapel of Love, a mail bag of often times sexually explicit singles ads. No matter which side of the issue you stood on, it made for spirited and entertaining debates through out campus.

Whether it was the President's sex life or city ordinances, students found something to argue over with one another. It could be heard anywhere from the benches of campus to the corner of the Pantry, everyone had an opinion or thought on the year's issues.

Renaissance faire

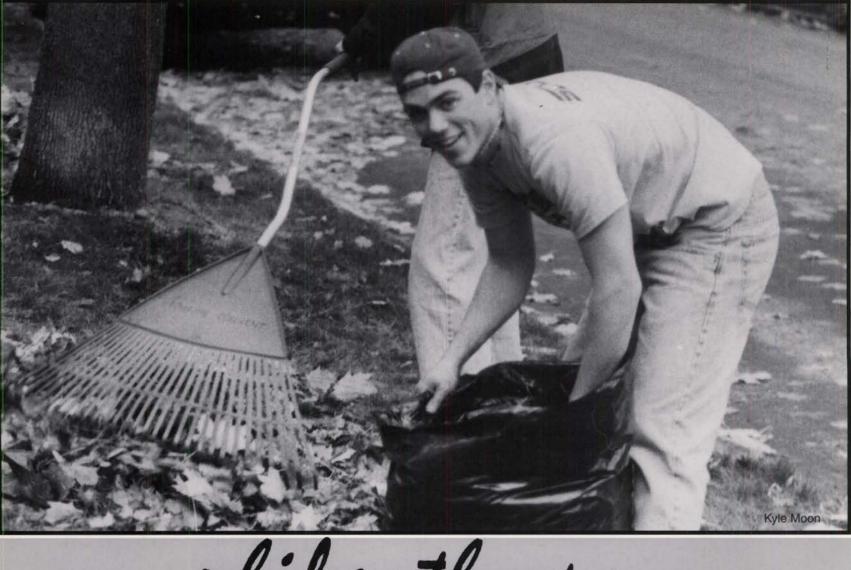

The one constant in the history of the Renaissance Faire is that participants from the University and the Community alike have a wonderful time. For the children there is a variety of entertainment and are games set up. For those with a mind to shop, there are rows upon rows of booths. The merchandise is mostly handmade, varying from pottery and yard ornaments to jewelry and clothing. The ever changing factor is the weather. It has been known to rain, sleet and even snow. Though last year was especially beautiful, this year brought a cloudy sky and brisk winds. But did this stop the crowds? I should say not. People were spread around East City Park on blankets enjoying the folk music that played all day. The food court was packed with people of all ages enjoying oriental food, spaghetti, strawberry lemonade and even huckleberry crepes. The day was a success as always. Many young ladies ran around with flowers in their hair and several members of the community were dressed in the annual medieval wear. One of the oldest traditions in Moscow, the Renaissance Faire brings together great food, music, arts and crafts. Story and Layout by Stacy Carroll

Julanthropy

More important than the special philanthropy at the holiday season is the goodwill that is spread through out the year. Certainly the Christmas for Kids and the Giving Tree are important for the less fortunate to enjoy the holidays.

Yet others work out of kindness the entire year round. Students band together to raise money for all sorts of causes. Every year the AGDs host a mud football game and donate the proceeds to worthy causes. Also the Delta Sigs who took time out to clean up leaves and garbage on the roads of Moscow. So why not incorporate fun into the monotony of doing good deeds.

Not to be left out are the many canned food drives, those who visit the elderly and the sick. Often forgotten are the volunteer firemen. These men give their time and energy to ensure that in case of a fire we will all be prepared.

All good deeds are meaningful, but most importantly are the ones that give all the year around. Philanthropy is about improving the quality of life all year, not just during the holidays.

Borah 24all

Borah hall kept up its tradition of brotherhood this year with campus and social involvement. Members of Borah gave their time to charities, and had an excellent hall turnout for Paint the Palouse for Spring 1999.

The men of Borah had strong participation in intramural sports, and took part in several different recreational activities. They also had a great time in the wilderness area of Spring Valley, at the annual Borah Hall Campout

During the snow season, it was common to find the Borah residents out in the parking lots, joining in spontaneous games of ice football. The residents of Borah made the best out of rain or shine.

Carter Hall sported a large variety of women who were both energetic and laid back.

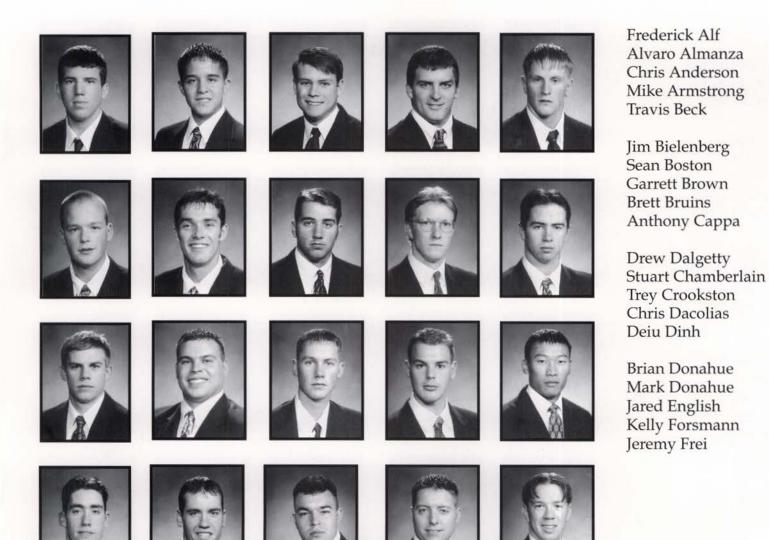

The 24-hour silence of Carter's sixth floor was a deep contrast to the enthusiastic noise the hall made at the University of Idaho.

The women of Carter Hall were big on activity, especially community service. The girls spent hours working on the Thanksgiving Food Drive, and also celebrated their womanhood year during Breast Cancer Awareness Week.

The ladies also enjoyed the social scene and were always bustling with activity. Whether it was play dough parties or weekend movie fests, Carter Hall was always having a blast.

Chrisman Hall

This year on Chrisman Hall, many exciting things took place. Ski trips to Silver Mountain and Red Mountain in Canada came together and everyone who went gained memories and friends for a lifetime.

The theme of Chrisman Hall (U of I's first co-ed by suite hall) was an outdoor hall. Camping, skiing, snowboarding, swimming . . . you name it, people did it!

Throughout the year, many solid friendships were made between people who had all come from very different backgrounds. The love of the great outdoors brought people together in a unique and fun-loving way.

There are several activities that set the Delta Chi's apart from others on campus. Every fall, the fraternity brothers embark on an adventurous raft trip, and in the Spring they host Polyester Wedding- where the members and their guests sport thier most atrocious Good Will rejects in meaningful tribute to the fashion conscious Delta Chi's of the past.

Another big event for their house is the annual Pirate's Dance, where the house is transformed into the only tropical paradise on Greek Row, complete with a moat, banana trees, and a waterfall running through the house. Story by: Desiree Hafliger

Nu chapter of Delta Gamma has enjoyed much success over the years. Their most recent accomplishments included winning the 1998 Homecoming competition, the UI Chapter Excellence Award, and the UI community service award. Senior Teresa Brown was named 1998 Greek woman of the year. Delta Gamma seniors enjoyed the honor of earning the highest GPA for Spring 1998.

On a national level, Delta Gamma received the Patricia Peterson Danielson award which goes to chapters who meet Fraternity Standards.

Anchorsplash, Delta Gamma's philanthropy, raised over $1,650 for Sight Conservation and Aid to the Blind. In addition, 1,900 Campbell soup labels were collected by Delta Gammas this year which helped raise money for Delta Gamma schools for the visually impaired.

The 1998-1999 academic year proved a great success for FarmHouse Fraternity. Our house goals included becoming more involved in both on and off campus organizations; and to strengthen our social and community activties.

Rushing sixteen new men in August, they quickly became involved in all activities, and led us to first place in Vandal Jingles during Homecoming. In the fall we participated in various social events including our annual SYRD, Hawaiian Luau with the Kappa Sigma's pledge cruise in Coeur d' Alene. We capped off the first semester with our Christmas Formal naming Gamma Phi Beta, Margi Hollifield, our new Crescent Queen.

With its enthusiasm and great participation among its residents, it's clear to see why Forney Hall was named the RHA's 1998-99 Female Hall of the Year.

Forney Hall women loved to have a good time, and were a very close-knit group with tons of energy. Each fall, and again in the spring, the group tests their survival skills in the great outdoors on a hall campout in Boyer Park.

They also devote a lot of time to campus and residence hall activities, and took 1st place in GEI Week this year. Besides boasting the RHA Hall President of the Year and a Freshman of the Year, the hall had the biggest participation in E-Ball of all residence halls.

French Hall was relegated to the fourth and fifth floor of Theopolis Tower. The ladies of French started out the year with a bang when they placed 2nd in the GDI Week events. They even took first in the Penny Wars raising money for charity.

The Hall also triumphed when they designed a Chinese Dragon for the Homecoming parade and won 2nd.

For the first semester of courting, the ladies won Graham as a brother hall, and they made sure to do things together through out the semester. Activities included a trip to Spokane to watch hockey, a day spent tie-dying shirts and inner child days where they watched cartoons and colored.

Graham Hall prided itself on being one of the most active halls on campus and won several RHA awards to prove it. This year the Graham boys took home the RHA Male Hall of the Year Award, Hall President of the Year, and several other outstanding awards.

They also prevailed in Homecoming activities and held the competition lead for most of that week. They came out in second place, a feat that brought residence halls back in the limelight for Homecoming rivalry against the U of I Greeks.

Besides community service projects such as the Walk the Dog program at the local animal shelter, the Graham men were active in several extracurricular activities.

The ladies that resided in Hays Hall, located on the 6th and 7th floors of Theopolis Tower spent the year with busy schedules and social lives. They did find the time, although, to win 3rd in GDI events for female halls overall. The hall placed in several individual events as well.

In-between the hectic life of a college student, the girls found time to improve the quality of their lives as well. Tae-Bo, a popular defense and exercise craze, found its way into the schedule of many Hays residents. The hall also spent time on the topics of Sex and Alcohol Awareness over the year.

The school year of 1998-99 proved to be yet another exciting and event filled year for Kappa Kappa Gamma, with its 33 new members.

The girls remained extremely busy after school hours. They supported the various fraternities in their philanthropies as well as improving some of their own. In the spring of1998, Kappas instigated a Fun Run to raise money in order to support the University's Women's Center. This year the second annual run meandered through campus during Mom's weekend in April. KKG gained significant recognition in their Panhellenic Organization. Jessica Pottenger, a junior at Kappa, was elected VP of Panhellenic and eventually became Prsident. Story by: Kappa Kappa Gamma

Kappa Sigma

In March of 1999, the glorious men of the Gamma Theta Chapter hosted the ever eventful Kappa Sigma Annual District Conclave. Kappa Sigs from throughout the bountiful Northwest ventured to the U of I to learn and discuss chapter operations.

This year Kappa Sigma continued their philanthropic excellence with their popular Powder Puff football tournament. This helped raise money for the Vandal's women athletics. Their basketball marathon, which raises funds to support cancer research, and their participation in the highway cleanup program are two other main ways that Kappa Sigs help save the world.

The 1998-99 school year was a very exciting one for the men of Phi Delta Theta. We started the year off with a raft trip in Riggins as a chance for the new members to get to know everyone better and to promote brotherhood (one of the principals the Fraternity was founded on). Sound learning is another of our principals which we achieved with a chapter GPA above the all-men's average. This year Phi Delta Theta celebrated its 90th year on the University of Idaho campus and the 150th anniversary of its international founding in Oxford, Ohio. Also, this year, we held the 42nd annual Turtle Derby, which has now become a tradition for Mom's Weekend.

The 1998-99 school year was an exciting one for the men at the Idaho Alpha chapter of Sigma Alpha Epsilon. The year started with rush, where we took 20 fine young men for the 1998 pledge class. This year we showed our house pride by being in the upper echelons of both intramurals and grades. We served our community by cleaning our Adopt-a-Highway stretch. We also raised over $1800 for the American Cancer Society with a golf tournament held during Mom's Weekend. Steel House was the female cooperative hall on campus. In exchange for lower room and board costs residents did janitorial and kitchen chores in shifts which worked out to be about three hours a month per resident.

The ladies of Steel House had plenty of time for fun when they weren't doing their chores. This year they participated in GDI Week, Homecoming, Spring Fling and held firesides (wedding showers) for their engaged residents. They also walked dogs for the Humane Society on the weekends.

They held their annual Man of Steel competition this year. The winner - Jas Krdzalic of Tau Kappa Epsilon.

1999 was the last year for Targhee Hall, the men's cooperative hall on the UI campus. This year the men of Targhee held their 13th annual Haunted House to benefit the Wishing Star Foundation, and the 40th Annual Huli Huli. They also participated in GDI (won 3rd place) and Spring Fling. They had a Knowledge Bowl team as well as a 3 on 3 basketball team.

When these men weren't socializing, they were earning their keep. Living in a co-op hall meant that the residents had to do chores including kitchen duty and various house chores.

In order to protest the loss of their hall, the men of Targhee planned to move off campus in the next school year.

The Global Village was located on the 2nd floor of Whitman Hall in Wallace Complex. As the name suggested, this hall encouraged diversity. There were around 15 different countries represented by students living on the hall. Students from Guatemala to Scotland to Sweden were living next door to students from various places in the U.S.A.

If you were looking for an international hall, the Global Village was just the ticket.

First floor of Whitman Hall was reserved for transfer students who were 21 years old and above. Due to the age group staying on this hall, it was fairly low key.

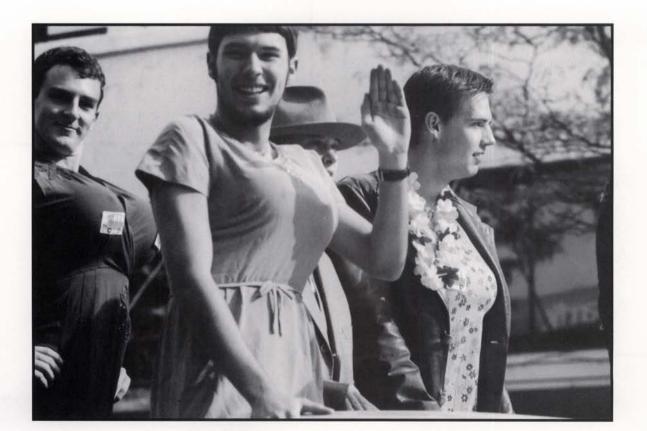

A lot of the students were new to U of I, coming from North Idaho college, Spokane Community College, and other schools from around the country.

Of the four women and seventeen men on the co-ed hall, there were only two double rooms, the rest of the residents were rewarded with their own space.

The group on the 1st floor was a close knit and friendly group of people, just starting out their relationship with the Moscow Campus.

Kyle brought the dark side of the force to the book this year with his wild, crazy, sexual, and often times abhorantly disgusting perspectives. He was a very talented photographer, a creative asset, and a freshman smart ass. Even though he made us swear at him and threaten murder, he always got away with a laugh.

The senior with the know how. She worked right down to the wire to make sure you could have some of the best pictures of your college career for posterity. Congratulations to the graduate, and good luck in all of your future endevors! Cheers!

Photographer: Jaret Frafjord

Jaret caught on film some of the sweetest shots the GEM has seen in years. You will recognize his handywork with pics of the admin at night, the awesome end zone dive, and his masterpiece, Joe Squirrel. Although quiet on the surface, he let loose with some quick comebacks that kept us in stitches.

Faces of the AEM

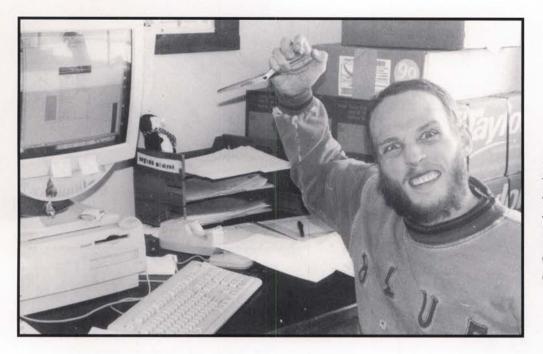

Assistant Managing Editor: Penny Short

Disregard the title, it doesn't tell you what she really did. She set up the Homecoming sales and promotions, the '97-'98 book distribution, and so much more that you would have tired trying to keep up with her. Her hard work helped to promote book sales and awareness on campus, and keep the editor sane through times of trial.

Assistant Production Editor: Barbara Cooper

Barb was the all around help of the book- she did everything from cover events and writing stories to copy editing and cataloguing all of the names for the index section. She was always there to pick up the slack when needed.

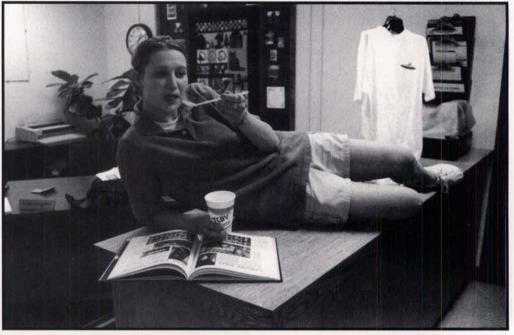

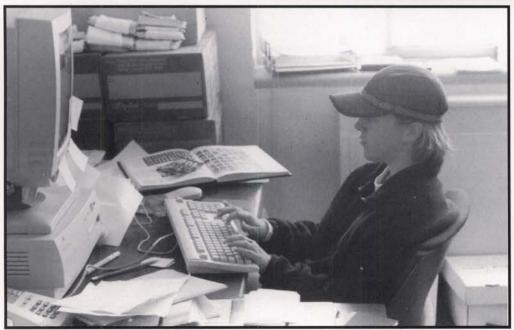

Sports Section Editor: T-Jay Clevenger

Even when he made the editor rage, this outdoor buff managed to get his spreads at least finished. He brought new flare to the section, as you will see, and really loved what he was covering- that makes all the difference!

Writer: Desiree Hafliger

This second semester frosh recruite came packing the heatwith words that is. She always had a story to tell- (sometimes when we thought there was none). You will enjoy reading her articles: years from now, they will still be able to conjure up great Vandal memories.

People Section Assistant: Leah Suddarth

Originally this section's editor, she worked hard to get all of the halls and houses to contribute information, stories and pictures for the book.

It was my job this year to see to all aspects of the creation of this book: managing a peer staff, working with the publishing company, staying within budget, and the list goes on. It was a spectacular, and sometimes ulcer inducing, crusade to the finish.

It was a time to live the words of Pat Benatar and my childhood:

"Hit me with your best shot!"

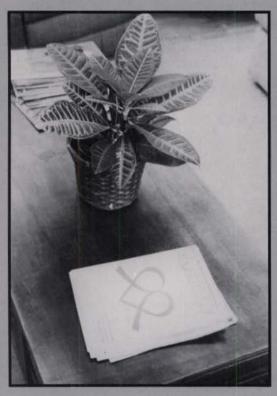

On Campus and Student Life Section Editor: Stacy Carroll

This girl had it going on! Stacy was the most dedicated GEM staffer. She went without sleep, and loaded up on Mountain Dew many a late night, to get her work done. She too contributed her talents in psychotherapy to keep the editor sane throughout various trials and tribulations.

--On-Campus---

The second attraction of this GEM tour is the On-Campus section. This is where you will find pictures and stories about campus issues such as...

the Women's Center,

Right: Another issue on the UI campus- a student shows that they support safe sex.

Do you care? You pay more $$$ in graduate fees than most peer institutions??? What the heck am I talking about? Has the nice little GEM staff writer gone bonkers? Contrary to popular belief, I'm not completely medicated and there is a purpose behind the first line in this story.

This line was on a poster as I walked past the Graduate Student Association office conveniently located in our very own Student Union Building. Once I saw that poster, I was hooked. I started reading all sorts of things located around the closed door to their office. I am not a grad student, yet someday I will be, and as an educated person of this society, I needed to see what this was all about. Graduates Student Association or GSA is an organization formed to help the trials and tribulations of grad students. This seemed pretty good to me. I thought, who doesn't need help when in college? But the really great thing was that GSA seemed to be an organization of really great people. This year they helped a fellow member of GSA when he became overwhelmed with medical bills. The GSA organization handed over $1000 to help their member pay for bills concerning his emergency appendectomy. This was the first year that these monies had been used in such a way.

Travel Awards were given out for those that had to travel for academic reasons, and the GSA represented its members on various student committees. The benefits went on and on.

I was impressed. I now feel like I should keep this organization in the back of my mind. Now all I have to do is graduate!

LAW SCHOOL Law

The academic program at the College of Law prepares the student for a lifetime of legal experience, and provides a wonderful clinic, trial practices, lawyers skills and opportunities. The University of Idaho College of Law is the only law school in Idaho, and has students from over eighty undergraduate universities. It is a member of the American Association of Law Schools and has been praised by the American Bar Association for many years.

The college is always bustling with energy, and activities that benefit the students, as well as the public, are organized on a regular basis. From the mock trials to guest speakers, the university provides insightful and entertaining programs to keep the students, professors, and the public interested. The law school tries its hardest to motivate the students to be the best that they can be.

The Bellwood Lectures are some of the most interesting and exciting activities the law school organizes for students. In accordance with the will of the late Sherman J. Bellwood, whose generous contribution funds the programs and lectures. The program brings such sparkling and prominent speakers as United States Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, and University of Colorado Law Professor Charles F. Wilkinson, and is a wonderful way for the students to observe masters of the legal professions in action.

Other programs, activities and publications through the law school are Raymond C. McNichols Moot Court competitions, Legal Aid Clinic Program, Board of Student Advocates and the Idaho Law Review.

ASUI ASUI

The ASUI student government was responsible for several aspects of the whirlwind of college life at the University of Idaho. Committees within the organization handled issues on everything from campus safety to academics, and provided valuable services to the university.

The ASUI Senate worked hard this year on several goals that they would like to see accomplished at the University of Idaho in the future. These included such things as starting a Freshman Kickoff Week in the fall semesters, having more ASUI speaking opportunities for the student government, and bringing more visibility to the university's students.

ASUI was in charge of the planning of quite a few major U of I activities, including Homecoming, Mom's Weekend, the SUB's weekly film series in the Borah Theatre, and setting up concerts such as Swing Nights.

Another component of the ASUI was the Outdoor Program. This is a non-profit service organization dedicated to "providing the resources to enable students to plan, pursue and enjoy outdoor activities". Students found out about these activities from posters and flyers all over campus. The ASUI's bulletin board was located in the SUB basement. With so many activities coordinated and planned for students, there was little cause for boredom on campus. Story By Desiree Hafliger

Greek vs. Residence Greek vs. Residence Greek vs. Residence Greek v Greek vs. Residence

With 23 different residence halls, 8 sororities and 19 fraternities to chose from, students agree that living oncampus is the most convenient " route to take. Where they disagree, however, is in which living group is the most ideal.

The Fraternities and Sororities maintain that they are the most desirable living groups to be a part of. They boast a large membership of colorful people who are dedicated to their particular house, as well as the Greek system as a whole. Group pride, devotion and the love of fun are major keys to the houses. Activities and meals are mostly done in group fashion. Greek members appear to experience good times, excitement and a family atmosphere 24 hours a day.

The residence hall members scoff at the close-knit lives of the Greek members. Instead, they relish the freedom that comes from living in the halls. Residents are allowed to come and go as they please, have guests at all hours of the day and enjoy the privacy of their own rooms and personal space. The University Residences keep exciting activities planned for members of the hall. Like in the Greek system, living in residence halls pretty much guarantees close friendships with a wide variety of people.

With so many activities centered around all the different living groups, there is never a dull moment. Whether you go Greek or become a "dormie", living right in the middle of the action is definitely beneficial to your college experience.

The University of Idaho boasts a rainbow of cultural diversity. Each semester the Moscow campus is specked with over 450 students from more than 80 countries across the globe. The international students' stay at the University typically ranges from 8 weeks to as long as 5 or 6 years.

After a student is accepted to the University, he or she is sent detailed information about colleges, as well as the area where they will be staying and a host family's living environment. They are also given a handbook on American culture and slang, as well as tips on saving money. The University puts together activities such as skiing and river rafting to help introduce the students to their new life in Idaho.

The International Friendship Program is one of the organizations that works to incorporate the students into the community. The group pairs students with local families whom they can share holidays with, making the students feel more at home. Several other services are offered for the benefit of the students. Programs include everything from physical exams to Immunization and Allergy clinics, and are arranged for students' convenience.

The center is proud to provide athletic services for Vandal spots teams through its sports medicine clinic, and also conducts wellness programs such as health fairs, alcohol awareness, nutrition, AIDS, STDs, and birth control programs. Skirts flew and bodies shook on September 10th with the first of a series of University of Idaho Swing Nights. With the recent popularity of Big Band Swing music it was inevitable that it would reach the SUB Ballroom. The night began with dance lessons at 7:30pm for the many students who hadn't learned the new dance craze. Though many were a bit shy at first they soon learned that the basic swing steps were not that difficult.

Other swingers with a little more experience teamed up with instructors to learn variations of the Lindy Hop and the Charlston.

After the lessons were given, the dancers were treated to the jazzy sounds of a live swing band "Not Too Shabby," who held true to their name. The ballroom came alive as students jumped and jived to the hip-shaking tunes that featured a very talented horn section. Everyone was encouraged to dress as one from the Big Band Era. The University of Idaho offeres four different branches of the Reserve Officer Training Corps, otherwise known as ROTC. The Army, Navy, Marines and Air Force are all represented on campus. Cadets participated in a variety of activities and training in either a two or four year program.

The Army ROTC's, 105 cadet strong program, has a two-fold plan for creating future military officers. First, set cadets up with life skills, and second teaching them the basic information to prepare them for commissioning as active-duty lieutenants. Cadets initially learn briefing skills, time management, map reading and repelling before moving onto more advanced technical and tactical skills.

The Army ROTC also aids cadets in achieving academic excellence. Upper-class cadets mentor lower-class ones, and all cadets get counseled at midterm to insure academic success.

Marines and Navy ROTC cadets share a building as well as a similar training program. Marines start the morning at 5 a.m. with a four mile run, then go to their regular classes. After classes they might man the flag pole or compete in a competition if it is the cadets duty week.

One event that is very important to cadets from all four branches is the Joint ROTC Ball. The ball consists of all the University of Idaho branches as well as Washington States branches. This year the keynote speaker was an Air Force general, who enlightened the cadets on the routes that one must take to reach his position.

Juno and the Paycock with its Irish melodies and tragic end. One of the actors split the crotch of his pants wide open on stage. As soon as he got backstage there was a mad scramble to safety pin it shut before too many people saw.

Then there was Orpheus in the Underworld. Backstage was a whirlwind of actors, dressers, makeup artists, technicians and orchestra members. With student-owned computers, as well as the estimated 5000 University computers on campus, the U of I boasted a huge display of technological power. The 20 common computer labs scattered throughout campus supplied students with the technology they needed right at their fingertips. The University also provided services for the benefit of the University population. The U of I Information Technology Services Help Desk had personnel working Monday through Friday to assist students and professors with all of their computer questions and concerns. The Help Desk worked to provide service to the campus, and had a wide range of specialists that provided for assistance of the students and staff. To get help with setting up an e-mail account or other computer troubles, a student had only to call, visit or e-mail the Help Desk, and they were given assistance as soon as possible.

As well as personal assistance, free workshops were frequently offered outside of class hours to familiarize students with the latest computer technologies. The Help Desk also provided free help sheets and access to training books and computer manuals, for the students who would rather figure things out on their own.

The University was trying its best to ensure that students were getting the technology and services they needed to better their

Anyone who has gotten a parking ticket, a lousy roommate, or was lost and needed to find a building has had the University of Idaho exert power over him or her. Students had different opinions about who has power over them.

Amanda Norby, a freshman majoring in psychology, said housing had power over people living in the dorms. When it came to having a roommate assigned, applicants were asked to fill out a small card and answer questions about what their lifestyle was like.

The Information Desk, located in the SUB, was a frequent stop for new and perspective students and their families. In addition to instruction of where buildings are located around campus, the Info Desk also sold concert tickets and acted as a lost and found.

In its proud 27-year history, the Women's Center has helped to bring distinguished speakers and enlightening programs to the University that deal positively with issues relating to gender and equality. This year was no different, with a wide assortment of scheduled events.

A one-act, one-woman play, "Faces of America," addressed the issue of multi-culturalism in American society. In the October production, actress Frande Leon challenged stereotypes by taking on the persona of nine distinct ethnic minorities from a Generation X perspective.

As November rolled around, the Student Union Building was host to the fourth annual Women's Works art fair. This festive gathering in the Vandal Lounge by area artists showcased different types of artwork and products.

Christopher Kimarten arrived in April to educate students about men's issues relating to sexual violence and gender equality. As a professor and professional standup comedian, Kilmarten's act, "Crimes Against Nature," used humor to get his important message across.

In addition to all these events, the University of Idaho gives out ribbons to recognize every declared awareness week: pink ribbons for Breast Cancer, purple for domestic violence and the ever popular red for AIDS awareness week.  The U of I Cheer Squad struts their stuff with high flying acrobatics and death defying drops.

As the stands fill the energy rises. This energy is what the University of Idaho cheerleaders use to keep the team and the crowd pumped up through every game.

Practice consumes more than nine hours a week. From this, a great sense of camaraderie and trust forms.

They showcase their talents at every game, amazing the crowd with their stunting, and dancing, making the most difficult routine seem like second nature.

Of the twelve squads attending the UCLA camp,

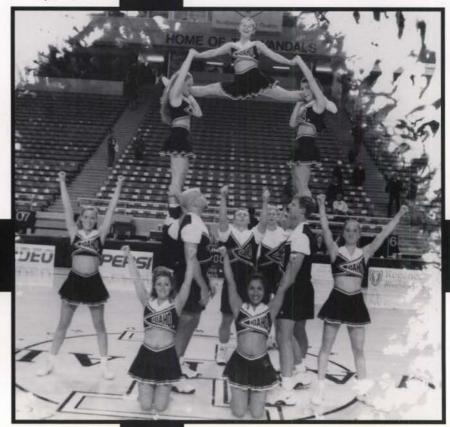

Idaho received Most Collegiate Squad and Best All Around Co-Ed Squad. "It gives you a sense of school pride. ... It's something so much bigger, you're a part of the action, and when you win or lose a game, you feel the excitement or the pain just as much as the team" states Latisha Taylor, junior.

Their motto is "Simply because you don't charge across goal lines, or hit home runs, or slam dunk basketballs, doesn't mean you can't change the score."

The audience waits in anticipation as the dancers enter center stage. Music fills the air and the dancers blow away the crowd with their ability and form.

The twelve girls that make up the Vandal Gold Dance Team put in extreme amounts of energy and time to make each performance its best.

They perform at football, basketball, and volleyball games. For their performances to go well they hold three two hour practices a week. Aside the time that is spent in practice the dance team is required to do cardiovascular fitness three times a week and weight training two days a week.

The dance team does more than perform at half time. They also participate in parades, bonfires and other pre-game activities.

Even though the dance team follows all athletic department guidelines they are not considered a varsity athletic organization.

They help keep the crowd alive during the halftime so the energy and spirit is still there when the players return to the floor.

"The adrenaline rush you get while performing and seeing the school spirit we have at the University is the best part of it all" states Danielle Baker, sophomore.

After 25 years, Coach Keller threw in the towel. Mike Keller started coaching at the University of Idaho in 1974. He coached some of the most elite athletes in the world, including Olympic gold medalist Dan O'Brien, and Twanda Chiwira. His coaching record includes seventeen top three finishes at the Big-Sky Conference Indoor/Outdoor Championships. Last year he was named District 8 Coach of the Year after quiding the Vandals to the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation Indoor Track and Field Championship at Reno Nevada. He took four athletes to the big show in 1999. Farewell Coach Keller, It has been an honor to have had your wisdom and guidance at the University of Idaho.

Head coach Mike Keller, and assistant coaches Tim Taylor and Greg Sun will go to the NCAA finals with four athletes. Peruvian leaper Hugo Munoz is ranked 6th in the nation in the high jump after coming off of a broken leg. He will strive to best his record of seven feet three and three quarters inches. Junior Twanda Chimura is ranked thirteenth in the nation in the 400m sprint, and will return to the NCAA's this year to better that mark. Joachim Olsen's sixty three and three guarter foot heaves rank him sixth among national shot putters going into the tournament. Jeff High will represent the U of I hammer throwers as he tries to reset his 201-1 foot record mark from earlier in the vear. These are some of the Rugby, a British import that is a cross between soccer and football, is more than just a sport known for it's violence and ultra competitive nature. On the field the competitive nature can lead to injuries, but after the games it's all laughs as players, otherwise known as ruggers, engage in time honored rituals. After the game, the festivities begin. Away teams are treated to free food and a bon fire party, known as a drink up.

Black Widow Rugby

"The teams swap stories, shake hands and sing songs " coach Appel says. Another of the rituals is the "Shoot the boot" ritual, where the players who make a mistake, fill their rugby boot with beer and sing the team song. These activities build a sense of team spirit and comraderie with the other teams.

Laurie Appel, a cocoach of the U of I Ladies Rugby team also known as the "Black Widows" said that the U of I has a very strong team." They expect to be one of the top three teams in the Northwest.

They sing songs of Ol' Cap'n Morgan, on their way to do battle with the University of Oregon. At the drink up they sing of Yogi and Boo-Boo, and slander Ms.Suzi just a little bit too. The team finished five and three, not too shabby for a team that can't usually see. These guys are real tough when they form their ruck, compared to them, most teams kinda suck. So if you see them making a mess, just remember, it's tough being the best.

UUTOOOR Programs Rental Center

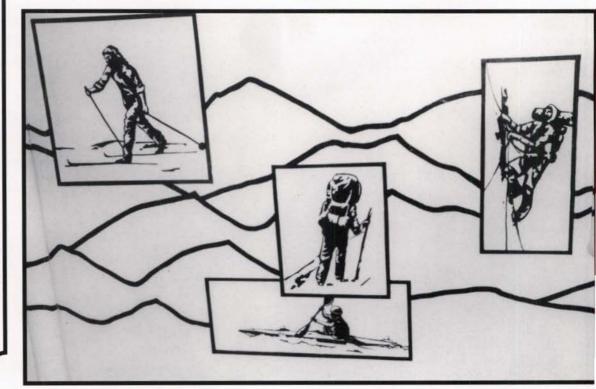

Kyle Moon

What can you build with 6 sleeping bags, six pairs of skis, two tents, and a raft? 25 years ago this year, Jim Rennie took this gear and founded the Outdoor Program at the University of Idaho.

25 years later Mike Beiser and Steve Mims manage one of the only UI programs that is self funded. The Outdoor Program is a non-profit service organization dedicated to providing the resources to enable individuals to plan pursue, and enjoy out door activities. This year the Rental Center and Outdoor Program combined to support 2 expeditions. One to Alaska's Mt Kennedy/Hubbard, and the other a Kayaking trip to Baja Mexico. Other trips included destinations such as Canada, Oregon, and Utah.

"This year has been one of the busiest years yet." stated Mims.

In 1999, the U of I outdoor program offered more opportunities than ever before with more than 100 trips and classes.

The Goal program was established by Drew Grimes.

The Outdoor Program received additional 3,500 square feet in the new Student Rec. Center for the year 2000.

The Outdoor Program Rental Center is one of the only programs that does not rely on subsidies from the University to operate.

Outdoor Program Expeditions

A look of frustration spread across his face as group leader, Mike Beiser, tried once again to extrapolate vital data from his computer. As we exchanged greetings, he mentioned that the process of putting the expedition together was as much work as climbing the actual mountain.

Every expedition involves two phases: the preparation phase, and the climbing phase. Both phases are equally important. Because climbing can be a dangerous activity, preparation is a primary concern. Frost-bite, altitude sickness, and crevasse location are a few of the issues that are scrutinized in the preparation phase. As important as the preparation phase is, it can not prepare you for all of the little surprises that mother nature bestows upon its climbers. Common sense, tolerance, and work ethic are paramount to a successful climb.

I had a chance to ask one of the expedition members why he climbed. He said that he climbed mountains for the shear joy of it. He made it clear that people do not ever conquer mountains. The mountains were there long before and will be there long after each climber. If by chance, a climber gets to stand atop the summit, he is fortunate. If he does not see the summit, then he is left with the experiences of being in an environment that only a few people will ever see.

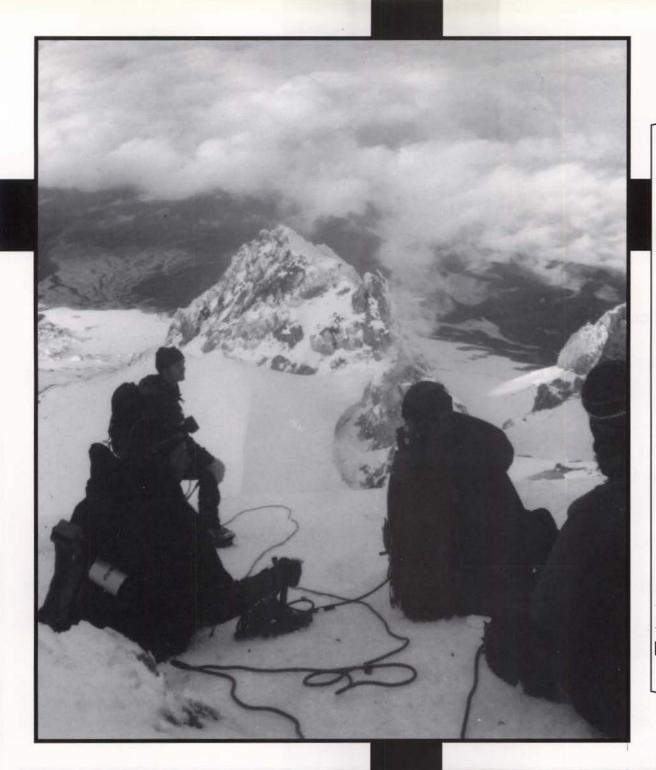

In 1999 The U of I sent ten climbers to remote Alaska to climb the Hubbard/Kennedy mountain massif. To those involved, I say "Good luck and happy trails." Story and layout by T-Jay Clevenger

The Vandal men had an outstanding season, led by head coach David Farrar. When Farrar signed on to coach the Vandal men, he had his work cut out for him. Only two players were returning from a team that had struggled in years past.

Farrar and team ended the 1997-98 season with an improved record of 15-12 overall, and climbed to new heights in 1998-99 with a 16-11 overall record and a terrific 11-5 record in the Big West Tournament by March of 1999.

The '98-'99 team had four starters return to play, along with eight letter winning players. The team was strong with players like Curry, one of the key players on the Vandal team, with a record of 19.7 points per game, and starters Cameron Banks and Falemao Tosi, both gifted athletes.

Lady Vandal BasketBall

Came a tribe from the North brave and bold, bearing banners of silver and gold . . .

They are young. They are fresh, and they've got a lot of drive behind them. They are the 1998-99 University of Idaho Women's Basketball team. This year UI had a lot of new faces and a lot of things to prove.

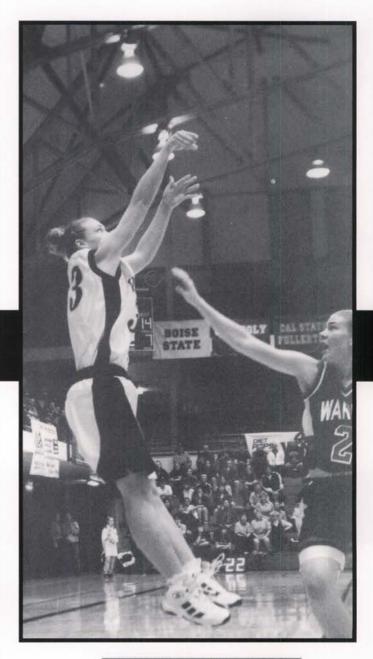

Five freshmen and one senior helped flesh out the team this year. Coach, Julie Holt was replaced by UI's top assistant last year, Hilary Recknor.

"We returned with three starters from last year and made a run for the Big West Championship and a chance at the NCAA tournament." stated Recknor.

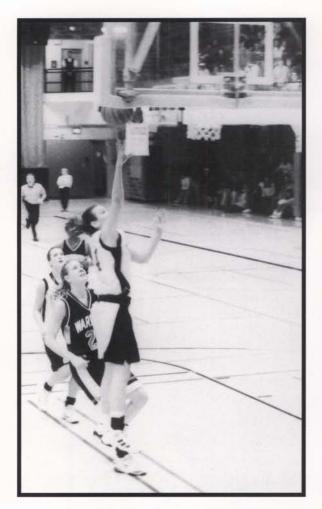

Being shut out in the Big West Championship was nothing to hang their heads over. Their diligence, hard work, and spirit showed in the Big West ranking for the season.

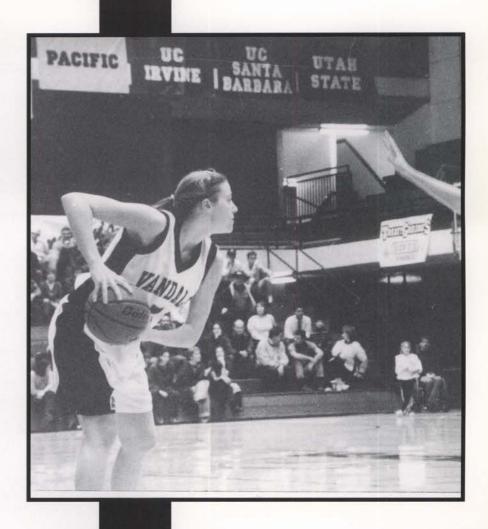

Of the twelve schools that form the Big West division, the Vandals came out on top. UI ranked second in scoring, second in field goal percentage, second in 3 point field goal percentage, fourth in free throw percentage, third in blocked shots and second in steals. This was not a season to be scoffed at, and definitely serves as a warning to all. The Vandals will be an even stronger threat next year, and will be back with a vengeance.

Sports Editor's note:

When I took the job as sports editor for the Gem, I began to think about what the sports section should really cover. I came to the conclusion that instead of covering 10 percent of the student population in my sports section, I needed to find out what the other 90 percent did to stay in shape. In this section I would like to pay homage to all the people who chose to find exercise in less traditional manners. I met skiers, climbers, racquetball players, and tennis players. I learned about the students who are not fine tuned physical machines, but want to stay healthy. If I had to sum up my experience in one sentence, It would go something like this...

"Here's to all the people who dare to do something different."

Vandal Soccer

This Lady Vandal soccer player demonstrates her own version of the big bang theory.

A sudden burst of energy threatens the hush of an early morning. The Lady Vandals have arrived. These gladiators, armed in black and gold, have come for one purpose: to triumph. Eagerly, they step onto the field for a day's battle, backed by their skill and strength, and protected from the brutality of the playing field by little more than a thin jersey, spiked feet, and shin guards that look too skimpy for comfort.

The Lady Vandals truly are "Wonder Women", complete with aggressive attitudes and bodies of steel; machines that grind out the magic that makes the soccer field (Guy Wicks Field) seem to explode with electricity and light up the Palouse. Splashed across the backs of the players' shirts is the team's motto, which reads, "Tikkun," or "Gathering of Sparks." This slogan is truly fitting of the brand-new program here at the university, and the shining energetic team members.

Led by head coach Larry Foster, the cluster of women, mostly freshmen and sophomores, make for a relatively young Varsity team. The youthfulness of the the team however, gives the University of Idaho's new soccer program a hip, playful, and promising outlook, and leaves plenty of time and opportunity for it to be molded into one of the top soccer organizations in the conference. Enduring long grueling practice sessions is the norm for these ladies, who often spend over 15 hours per week training in the off season alone. The fall season brings the women onto the field or into the gym six days a week, and though the policy only allows twenty hours per week of practice, including scheduled games, these gals get their fair share of workouts and sweat sessions. Academics are stressed and two hours of study table are required for team members at least four days a week.

Several of the women were honored for their excellence to the team and the University. The years Most Improved award was snagged by Maegan Levinthal, while Most Inspirational player went to Freshman Jenny Frazier, who was also given the title "Iron Woman," for being the player with the most time on the field. Kathy Clark was commended for her academic excellence, and Sophomore Andi Lee was chosen as the teams "Most Valuable Player."

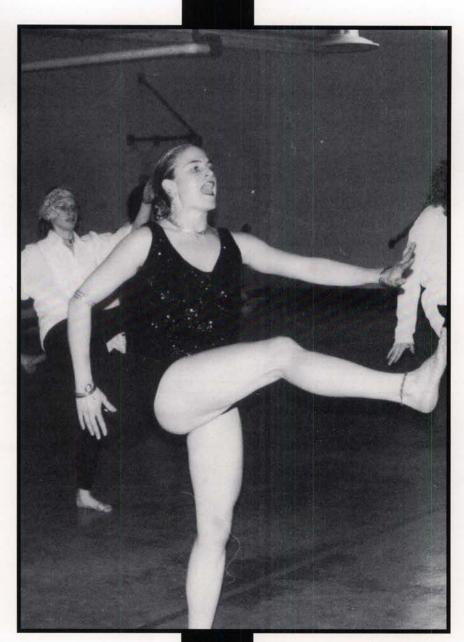

With the team practicing and playing their hearts out, and the new recruits already being lined up for the coming seasons, the future of the ladies' soccer program at the the U of I looks bright. For these amazing, dedicated women, it's heads up and full speed ahead.

Union Bank of California. It's Different Here!

Union Bank of California is the third largest bank in California and one of the 28 largest in the United States. An acknowledged leader in Business Lending, Consumer Lending, Private Banking, and Trust and Investment Management, UBOC operates over 244 branch offices in California as well as in key markets in other states and throughout the Pacific Rim. Our parent company, the Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi, is the world's largest bank.

Union Bank of California offers a wealth of exciting career opportunities for talented, goal-oriented people.

Business Relationship Officer • Business Relationship Officers manage the entire business relationship with a portfolio of small to mid-size companies. Primary duties include initiating and servicing loans and assisting senior officers in planning business development strategy for the target market.

Priority Banking Officer • Priority Banking Officers develop and manage relationships with affluent individuals and law, accounting, and other professional service firms. Responsibilities include generating new business, expanding existing relationships, and providing alternative, responsive customer service.

Real Estate Officer • Real Estate Officers manage the business relationship with major customers in real estate and associated industries. Duties include underwriting and structuring commercial loans and averseeing comprehensive, accurate loan documentation. Real Estate Officers also identify and call on prospects to develop new business relationships.

Successful applicants will possess a college degree (any major), evidence of leadership and sales ability, and be willing to relocate anywhere in California. To be considered for the Management Training Program, send your resume and a letter of interest to:

Grant Thornton is the only major international firm organized and dedicated to serving mid-sized, growing companies. In today's competitive environment, middle-market companies face significant challenges in keeping up with increasingly complex accounting and tax requirements, and in dealing with such issues as quality improvement, international trade, and market expansion. Grant Thornton has the resources to help middle-market companies respond to these business challenges.

As a Grant Thornton professional, you'll be part of a cooperative team, one that values individual differences and supports the need to balance work and personal commitments. From day one, you'll hit the ground running and be involved in client work as quickly as possible. You'll work closely with clients, learning all aspects of their business, and become a trusted adviser. You'll also have the opportunity to work on many different projects, so you can experience a variety of different clients and industries.

Editor's Note:

I don't think I really knew what I was getting myself into when I applied for this job! The only ones who really do are the ones who suffer from strange afflictions deep within, I think. I survived the aches and pains though, and I am proud of all that my staff, myself and others were able to acomplish this year.

I wish to offer additional thanks to David Mucci, who provided me with the extra bodies I needed when in a pinch. I am sure I speak for many when I say that "We will miss you."

Thank you so much to Anne, Kristen and Marlene for making student media my home away from home; and, for lending me your talents, expertise and ears.

Stacy, I turn over the title to you with no hesitation. Remember that each new editor brings a new perspective and new direction to the book, and good luck.

Thank you to Penny, Karen, and Leann: friends and roommates. You were all wonderful friends for even attempting to put up with me during this whole strange period in my life. You each brought me great times of peace when I needed them.

I want to tell my sis and parental units that I am grateful for your unflagging support. Thanks momalla, for not throttling me before the wedding.

Thank you to everyone at the University of Idaho: students, faculty, staff. You have all helped to shape this book and in turn, my life, for the last year.

Plus que mots, this is all the thanks I have to offer to my new husband, Karl.

I will rember '98-'99: and the many faces of my past as well as the Faces of the Future.....
