The Life and Music of Gene Harris
—Janie Harris with Bob Evancho

Gene Harris (1933-2000) was born to play the piano, performing with a joy and power that made him “one of the world’s most exciting blues-based pianists,” according to the London Times. Here’s what other reviewers had to say about his musical magic:

“I swear, the piano at the Blue Note does things for Gene Harris that it wouldn’t do for anybody else. It sounds like a different instrument when he plays it: richer, fuller, stronger.”

—New York Post

“There is no pianist with a better feel for the blues than Gene Harris. ... so securely rooted in the soil of soul he [ranks among] the greatest interpreters of blues changes since jazz assumed the mantle of modernity.”

—Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

“Harris is known to jazz aficionados and to his peers as one of the greatest blues pianists in the world.”

—Wall Street Journal

“Harris swings like Basie, plays with the elegance of Ellington and the percussive power of Brubeck.”

—Idaho Statesman

“Is there any pianist who can outdo Gene Harris in hitting and sustaining a blues groove? No name comes to mind.”

—Los Angeles Times

“One of the churchiest pianists in jazz, [Harris] turns the keyboard into an altar for preaching the blues and rocking the pews.”

—People magazine
