It pays to study.

Take care of your eyes.

Rush your work or it will rush you.

Be an enthusiastic, patriotic college man or woman.

Dress neatly and be tidy.

The Christian man or woman is most respected.

You can get what you want at the Badger Store.

Don't get discouraged; others have been through the mill and come out alright. You can.

Put your energy into religious work rather than college politics, the former will develop your manly qualities, the latter your mean ones.

Don't GOSSIP about students or any class of students. It is mean and dangerous to yourself and others.

Attend the reception September 29. You are supposed to know everyone and everyone to know you after it.

Be sincere in everything and always true to your best self.

The place for a good meal is McCray's Restaurant.

Join a literary society and join for business. You can get more good from it than from any single course you may select.

Great things are at stake; you are building a character that will tell for eternity. Choose your material carefully.

Don'ts

Don't make your room a livery stable. Honest work wins every time.

Don't worry. It kills more people than work.

Don't forget to be a gentleman or a lady always.

Don't sit up all night and call that studying.

Don't steal your friend's time when he wants to study.

Don't forget that McCray has the meal you want.

Don't tell all you know to a stranger. Always keep one idea in reserve.

Don't study on Sunday. You can't afford all that it costs.

Don't think that everyone is watching you.

Don't forget the fine line of gents' furnishing goods at David's Badger Store.

Don't make yourself a nuisance in the library.

Don't think you save time or work by skipping a class. You don't.

Don't put your interests against the interests of the college. If the Athletic Association or the Literary Society wants a dollar, dig it up without a murmur. That is the way to win banners and keep clear consciences.
