

The author and the twin airedales

THE AUTHOR

Bea Boynton has "worn many hats" and her name is recognized in them all . . . whether in news columns, articles, daily radio programs, in Hollywood or Hawaii, in TV appearances—an airedale is always part of her picture.

Mrs. Boynton currently is administrative secretary to the vice president of a national insurance company, whose president commented "in the West, it seemed to be Paul Revere and an airedale, rather than the traditional horse!"

As a week-end writer, Mrs. Boynton's most recent book "AN AMATEUR GUIDE TO ANTIQUE BOTTLE COLLECTING"—a primer for the beginning collector—is in its third edition nationally.

Mrs. Beatrice White Boynton was born in Ithaca, New York. She attended Cornell University, Russell Sage College in Troy, New York, and received her teacher's degree from Buffalo Normal School. Her home is in Palo Alto, California.

Suddenly I had two Airedale puppies—seven weeks old. I had forgotten what puppies are like. But I found out! It occurred to me, discovering all I had to relearn, as well as all I remembered, that this current knowledge could be of benefit to all who are getting their very first puppy. So, you see—this is not a book for those who have had dogs but one for you who haven't.

In this primer I have touched upon the most bewildering part of what to do and how to do it. The information, of necessity, is limited, for this is an enormous subject. I have passed on the “wheres” and “hows” of getting further detailed guidance on the many questions that will surely arise in your hilarious first year! This is a guide only.

The captions tell you the contents. The pictures tell the story of the many who have successfully raised their puppies to become happy, healthy, adjusted members of their families. And so will you.

Read on.
