Members of the Idaho Transportation Board will inspect eastern Idaho highways Oct. 19, including an overnight stop in Driggs, said Rep. John O. Sessions, R-Driggs, House Transportation Committee chairman.

This visit, he said, will be part of the board's annual fall inspection tour of road conditions and improvement projects completed and under way in eastern Idaho.

Highway improvement projects scheduled for 1984 in the area which will be inspected by the board include the five-mile improvement project on Highway 33 from Clementsville east and the Granite Hill project on Highway 26 west of Swam Valley.

The Granite Hill project, said Sessions, has a special federal allocation of $6.2 million and was made because of the high frequency of accident there.

Individuals and organizations desiring to meet with the board between 4 and 6 p.m. Wednesday may do so at the Teton West Motor Inn in Driggs, where the board will stay overnight.

Driggs Chamber of Commerce members and others interested individuals will join the board for a no-host dinner at 6 p.m. at Pierre's Rendezvous, said Sessions.

Board members include Chairman Carl Moore, Lewiston; Roy Stroschein, Aberdeen, and Lloyd Barron, Fairfield. They will be accompanied by Keith Green, state engineer; Jerry Dick, Rigby, district engineer; and a representative of the Federal Highway Administration, and possibly others.

Other overnight stops will be made in Ketchum Tuesday and in Pocatello Thursday.

The board inspected sections of state highways at other times during the year in other sections of the state.

Sessions and his wife, Alice, plan to leave Thursday for a tour of the Holy Land, scheduled to return Nov. 1.
