June 28

Dearest Oji-san,

It's so cool and quiet this room, that it makes me feel good, so I'm going to dash off a line or two to you. It's a perfect Sunday with a clear blue sky, the sun shining brightly, and just enough breeze to keep a person cool.

Just after I had mailed my letter to you, Father received one from you, stating that you were in the Hospital because of high-blood pressure. I was surprised and worried to hear this, and more than ever I wished that you could hurry and come here, because the high-altitude there is so bad for you. I don't think your high-blood pressure will improve at all if you stay there. Did you have your re-hearing yet, and what was the outcome of it? Just last week, a man who was formerly in internecine, came to tell us that you were quite well when he left Santa Fe. He had come back last month, but since his leg was troubling him, he was unable to come and tell us about you. He said, he always saw you at the Mess Hall.

You asked about a conflagration, and I didn't quite understand what you meant, but I learned later that there had been a small fire far from our block, and so we, up this way, didn't even hear about it.

We're wondering, right now, when Fumi-chan is coming here, for we haven't heard from her since about the sixth of June. She had planned to leave Ohio on the 15th but we don't even know if she did leave already. I'm only hoping that she'll be here soon, for it's been over a year since I last saw her.

Now that I've graduated, I'm doubtful of what I should do. At any rate, I shall go to the Vocational School which they have started here, from tomorrow. In this way, I shall be learning more about shorthand and typing, and at the same time, I'll be earning twelve dollars a month. But so many jobs are opening now, that I believe I'll be working very soon on a permanent job. I'm not sure ^{as to} what is better.

~~So,~~

Are you permitted to walk around altho' you are in the hospital? Are you feeling any better than you used to? We're all quite fine except Ka-chan, so do not worry about us. As for Ka-chan, she has a cold which just will not get well, because she doesn't go to bed earlier in the night-time. She is getting to be such a spoiled baby, that she never obeys what her elders say.

Please take good care of your health, Oji-san, so that you'll be out of the hospital soon.

Love,
Yoshioka
