

Wildlife Team Hikes Into Wilderness To Gather Big Horn Data in Winter

McCALL — Some people think of Idaho Fish and Game Department personnel only as wildlife policemen, never realizing the extent to which they are actually involved in management and monitoring of big game.

The opportunity to observe this operation came recently, thanks to cooperation by Fish and Game Department officers in McCall.

Dave Neider, a department wildlife biologist set up a flight into the Taylor Ranch along Big Creek to observe big-horn sheep.

The trip involved a 75-mile flight east, over Nick Peak, across the South Fork of the Salmon, over Yellow Pine, down Monumental and Brush creeks and a landing on the banks of Big Creek.

Pilot Bob Fogg, McCall, made the landing approach between canyon walls, only a few feet off either wing. The landing was made on a snow-packed field.

At the ranch, Don Saxman, a conservation officer, and Arlow Lewis, ranch caretaker, were on hand to greet the flight.

The ranch, which consists of four cabins and small pasture, belongs to the University of Idaho and is used as a wildlife research center.

After a lunch of coffee and candy bars (food staples of the backcountry) the search for the elusive sheep began.

Just a half-hour's walk from the ranch, a medium-sized flock (about 30 head) was spotted on the top of a canyon ridge. A two-hour climb brought the party close enough to classify a large portion of the flock.

The mechanics of classification are simple — at least in theory. Approach the flock and record the number of rams, ewes and lambs. Unfortunately, sheep, like people, will not always stand up and be counted. Their milling through the brush and rocky angles often makes this "simple" task impossible.

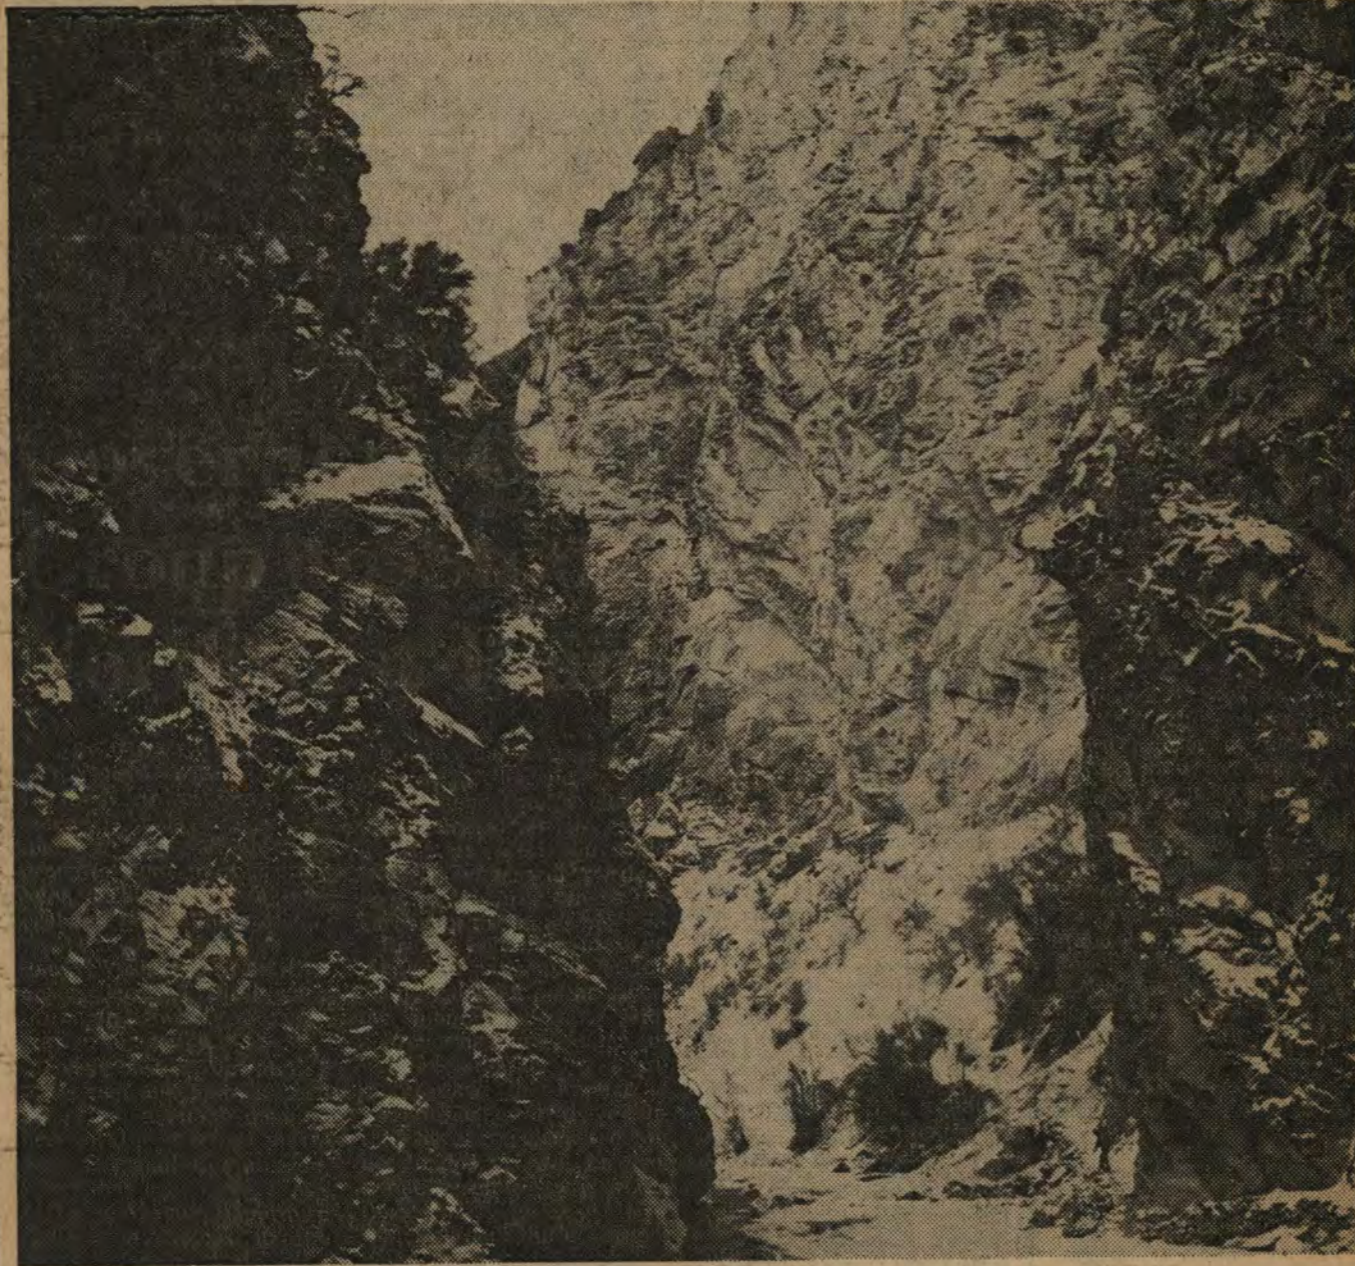

This flock proved to be too un-cooperative to count but better luck prevailed the next day.

After a 10-hour sleep and an 8 a.m. start (mountain men tend to sleep late, because the sun never reaches the canyon floor until noon) the party was able to classify a complete flock in an open meadow.

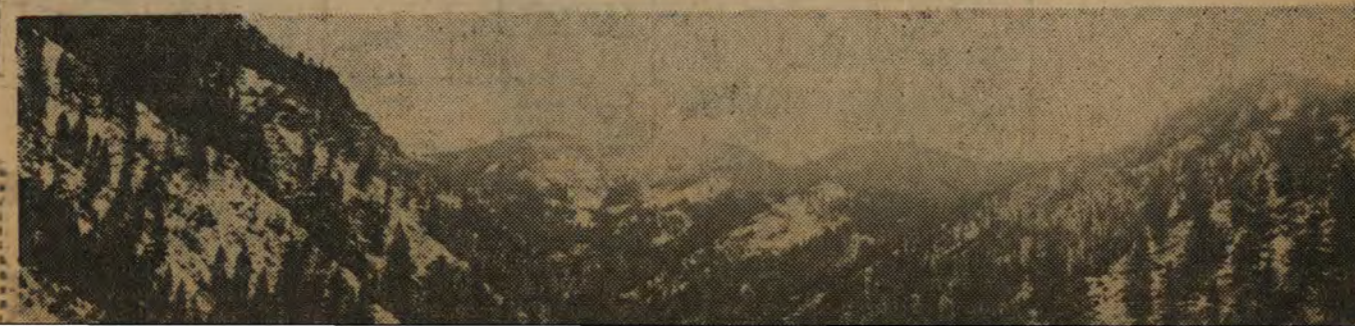

The ram-ewe-lamb ratio and total flock size are quality important information for game managers. From data collected on such field trips, estimates of total sheep population are compiled each year.

This information is used for research and to help determine hunting limits for the next season. Despite the inconvenience, winter months are the best for these studies because cold weather forces the flocks to lower elevations.

The biggest find came on the third day when, after scaling a ridge directly across the creek, the party counted and crashed down, and six legal rams (three-fourths curl).

This is Big Creek Gorge in the Idaho Primitive Area — home of bighorn sheep.

A telescope was used by Don Saxman, left, and Dave Neider to spot bighorn sheep in the Idaho Primitive Area — too far away for a camera shot.

Taylor Ranch lies in a valley under a blanket of snow.

The area within the Big Creek drainage once was inhabited by Sheepstealer Indians, named for their success in hunting the bighorn sheep.

The Indians are gone now — moved away in 1879 by the U.S. Army — but traces of the region's ancestors remain. Indian writings are still visible on the walls of the gorge below the ranch.

When the work was completed, snow flurries delayed the flight back to McCall. The fare was worsening, but with 100 pounds of flour, 20 pounds of sugar, 10 boxes of biscuit mix and countless candy bars, there was no immediate danger.

The next afternoon, the clouds lifted long enough to get the light plane into the air. The pilot easily maneuvered the aircraft past the ridges that had taken hours to ascend on foot two days before.

Few Idaho residents ever enter the primitive area. It still belongs to wild animals like the bighorn sheep. It is a last frontier — something to be protected.

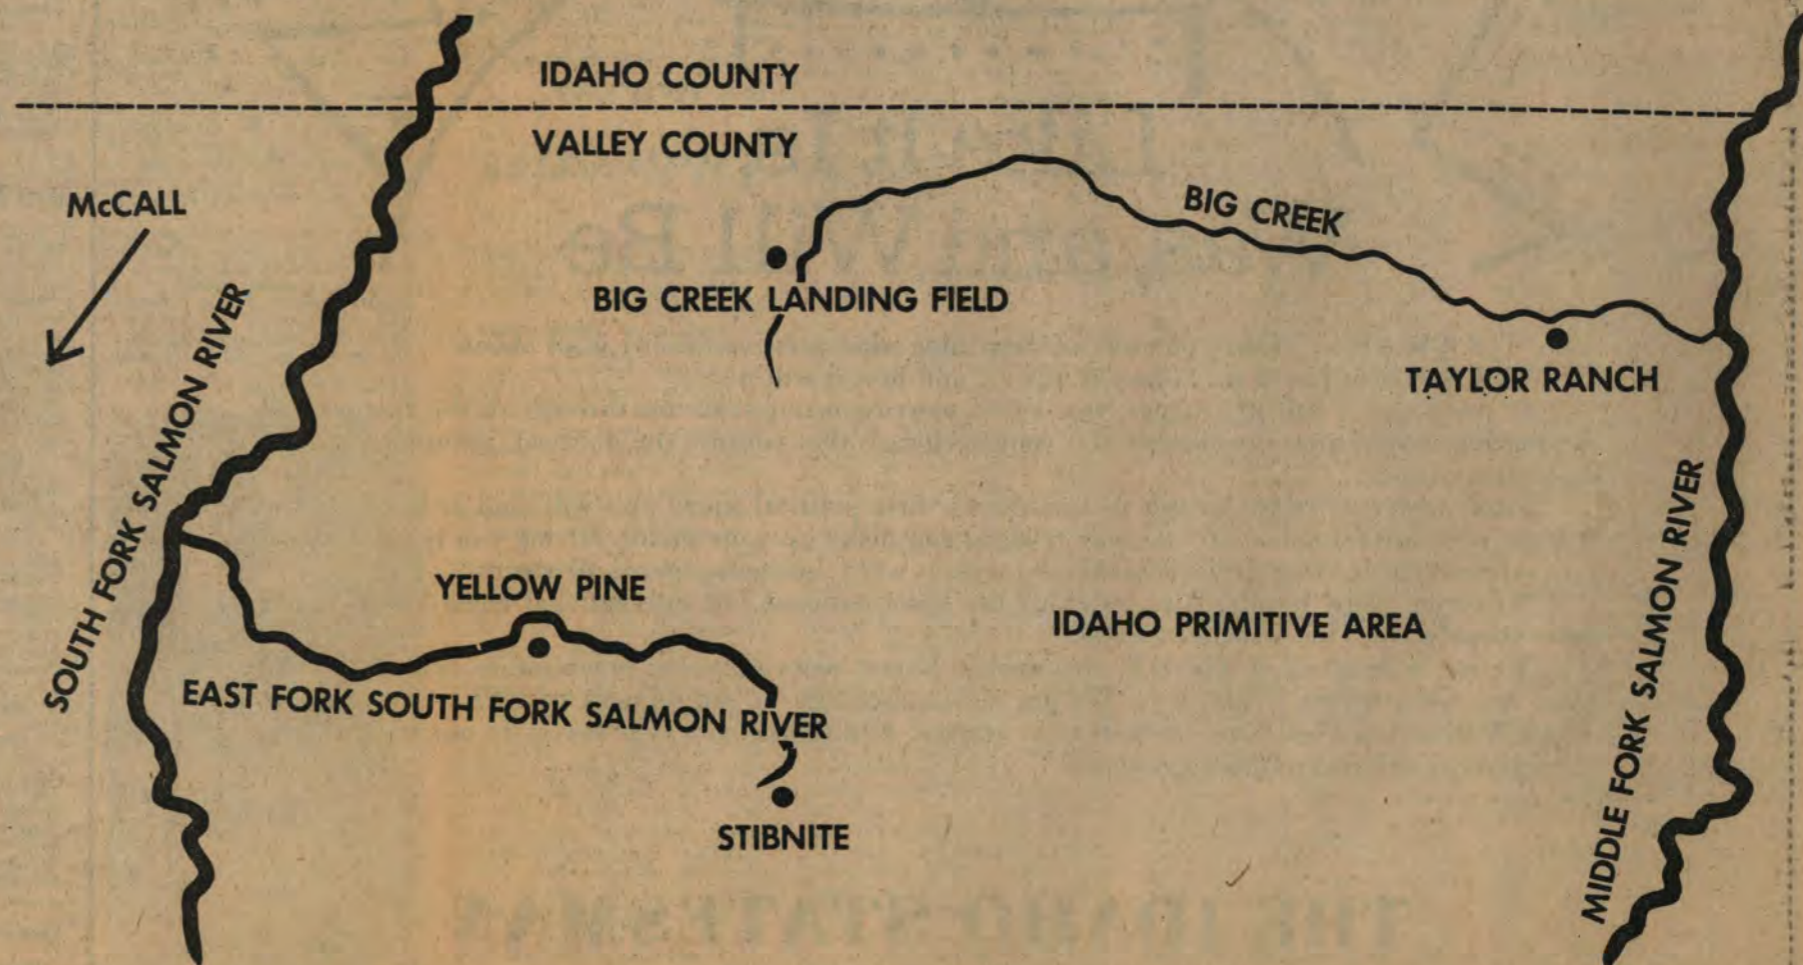

Arlow Lewis stays year-around to look after the Taylor Ranch.

Yesterday's Jumbles: WHILE NAIVE FORCED INVITE

Like It Is, Was, and Will Be

"Tell it like it is!" That's one way of describing what press credibility is all about. Well, we tell it like it is . . . how it was . . . and how it will be.

In the pages of this newspaper, you'll find news reporting that cuts through all the rhetoric, all the partisan in-fighting, the charges and countercharges that confuse the political, governmental and diplomatic scenes.

From yesterday's last hurrah to tomorrow's first political move you will find it here . . . the straight story without slant so you, our readers, can make up your minds. Giving you reliable, accurate information for that decision-making process is what this newspaper is all about.

We're on guard locally. And watching the state, national and international chess moves is our news cooperative, The Associated Press.

We are a member of The AP, the world's largest news-gathering organization, which for 125 years has been telling it like it is. We are also subscribers to the services of UPI - Los Angeles Times-Washington Post Wire/Gannett news service. Additional news is gathered by our staff of over 40 reporters, editors and photographers.
